Or what if you could see the same young man examined microscopically, so that the body is in the form of a molecular structure. The structure may look beautiful, but you certainly do not see a handsome, young man.

Undifferentited space represents this young man in formless form, which is invisible to the human eyes. You may call this form Original Nature.

May I now call your attention to this important fact: these five forms are not different entities. They are the same man in the same spot and at the same instant, but to your eyes they appear to be very different.

Now, visible light, infrared light, and X-ray vision are only a few wave lengths among the infinite number of wave lengths in the universe represented by the electromagnetic spectrum. This young man can, therefore, appear in an infinite number of different forms at different wave lengths. That is to say, if we assume that your eyes are capable of seeing things at any wave length, and not only at the wave length called visible light, then, as you scan the spectrum, you are really becoming Alice in Wonderland. The form of this young man changes momentarily and continuously; there is no one form that is permanent, nor can any form be considered as real.

Not only can this young man appear in so many different forms, including the formless form which is emptiness in the ordinary sense; but every one of us can also appear in all those forms, including the formless form, or emptiness. At this point, you should note that all the formless forms of all of us are the same. Now, if the truth is such, is it not foolish that we adhere so much to the physical body, which is just one of the infinite forms manifested by Original Nature and which is used to create this concept of self?

These three analytical methods lead to the conclusion that the physical human body is impermanent and is a momentarily changeable form seen by human eyes in a very narrow range of wave lengths. Since this is the reality of a human body, how is it justifiable to call it a self, an individual entity? Therefore, there is no self, only emptiness.

Once, I introduced this doctrine of "no self, only emptiness" to some of my friends. One friend cried, "If I lose myself and become emptiness, how can I sell! be alive?" To this question I answered, "The Buddha achieved this realization that there is no self, only emptiness, upon his enlightenment at the age of 35 and he lived a happy life until he was 80 years old." Therefore, the destruction of the concept of "self," and the realization of emptiness, do not mean the end of life; on the contrary, this stage is the beginning of the happy life. I will discuss this more fully in the next talk.

LECTURE 4:

THE SOURCE OF JOY

Let me make it clear, first of all, that the joy I refer to here is not the kind of temporary joy that can be the cause or source of later suffering. For example, one does have a sensation of joy and being carefree when one i drunk, but the actions one might commit while intoxicated could be so foolish that one might feel deep regret afterward, or they could cause such irreparable consequences that the suffering created thereby would be much greater and longer lasting than the temporary joy that accompanied the drinking. That kind of joy, if you still wish to call it joy, is classified in Buddhism as suffering--it is not joy, because it is the beginning of suffering.

The joy I refer to here can be better defined as the opposite of suffering, or the cessation of suffering: for example, the kind of feeling one enjoys when one can fall asleep quickly and soundly, without drugs, after suffering insomnia for many years, or when one is able to rest after a number of hectic days in a political campaign or a demanding day in the business world. One might find oneself enjoying that relaxation in a mountain-lake region. As one gazes at the high, snowcapped mountains and the huge pine trees, the world and its worries seem a thousand miles away; one feels so very small yet at the same time so great that one feels alone in the universe.

In Buddhism, there are several ways to classify human suffering. The most common is a listing of eight categories of suffering as follows:

1. Suffering because of birth

Although no one remembers the Pain experienced upon leaving the mother's womb, the very fact that a newborn baby cries rather than smiles indicates that there is no bliss at birth.

2. Suffering because of age

Although aging is a slow process that takes place over a number of years, the sometimes sudden realization of the reduction of youthful strengths and ability is a painful experience for most people past the age of sixty. Evidence of this feeling could be found on a visit to a home for the aged, or simply in speaking to any older person on the subject.

3. Suffering because of sickness

Very few people can claim immunity to sickness or injury. I do not have to elaborate on the painful experience of being sick. This kind of suffering is particularly prevalent among people who live in places where nutrition and medical care are inadequate.

4. Suffering because of death

The majority of human beings suffer painfully because of their awareness of the inevitability of death. Such suffering is particularly severe for those who have a strong ego, great power, or great wealth, as it is very difficult for them to contemplate giving up these things.

5. Suffering because of separation from loved ones

Death is considered by most to constitute permanent separation. One who has had the experience of losing a loved one knows how painful that experience can be, and the suffering it brings can hardly be remedied. Heartbreak, worry, the expectation of bad news--all these kinds of suffering are expressed through grief and tears by those whose loved-one have been kidnapped, or imprisoned in concentration camps; who have faced the danger of death, been sent to war, or been forced into an indefinite period of separation because of political circumstances.

6. Suffering because of an undesirable confrontation with another person or thing

Some examples of this kind of suffering might be an unexpected meeting between two people who hate each other; a beautiful girl being chased by a man she does not like; suddenly coming face to face with a robber or maniac; turning a corner and finding a rabid dog or other animal on the attack--all these encounters can be sources of great suffering.

7. Suffering caused by denial of one's desires

A child will cry when-he or she wants a piece of candy and the mother says "no." Other examples are failure to win the heart of the one you love or failure in business. One can also suffer a great deal if one needs money desperately and is unable to get it.

8. Suffering because of the burning characteristics of the human body and mind

In Buddhism, this refers to the five aggregates which form the human body. These five aggregates are form, sensation, perception, conditioned function, and consciousness. Examples of the burning characteristics of these five aggregates, or, as I put it in simple terms, body and mind are anger, anxiety, excessive sexual desire, hatred, jealousy--all these can be sources of suffering.

Since the joy I refer to is defined as the cessation of suffering, it becomes clear, after the description of the eight categories of suffering, that the root of suffering is, again, our concept of body and mind. If we do not have body and mind, there is no birth and therefore no suffering because of birth. Without body and mind, aging, sickness, death, and the other four kinds of suffering have no base from which to operate. Therefore, the root of all human suffering is the human's concept of and attachment to a body and mind. As in the case of the concept of birth and death and the concept of karma, the complete cessation of suffering can only be achieved by the realization of Original Nature, which means the realization that the body and mind, which appear to our sensory organs to exist, are changing from moment to moment, are impermanent and unreal, as if one saw oneself in a dream, or were an actor playing a part - all is therefore defined as emptiness, or sunyata.

Therefore, the realization of Original Nature means complete cessation of suffering, means ultimate joy. The conclusion of this theoretical analysis, which I have earlier referred to as Path 3, is that our own Original Nature is the source of true joy. May I repeat that: Our own Original Nature is the source of joy.

Now, this sounds great, but it is just like saying the clear autumn sky is the source of cheer at a time when the sky is heavier overcast and it is raining, if not storming. Buddhism is not just philosophical study. One who knows everything in theory about swimming but has never practiced in water will still face the possibility of drowning if he or she falls into deep water. So, Buddhism places emphasis on practice. To realize Original Nature one must practice according to those methods that I have called Path 1 and Path 2.

Path 1 is designed for the person who is able to divorce himself or herself entirely from worldly affairs and to practice vigorously the concentration of the mind on one point. This method is analogous to launching a rocket from crowded Times Square in New York City on a stormy day with thick clouds. Now just imagine how difficult it would be to fire a rocket under such conditions. Many rockets, even when launched successfully, probably fall back to earth without ever having reached the upper level of clouds. Only the ones that have enough strength to ascend non-stop can penetrate the heavy cloud cover. The instruments in those rockets that do make it will suddenly detect bright sunshine and the endless deep blue sky in all directions. At that time, what the instruments detect is vast space, quietness, clearness, and emptiness. Crowded and noisy Times Square in New York

City, and even the whole earth, become so small by comparison that they lose their significance entirely.

A similar breakthrough in the human mind, according to Buddhism, is called enlightenment. At the moment of enlightenment, Original Nature reveals vastness, limitlessness, and incomprehensible nature beyond description. All the habits, desires, discriminations, and attachments of human beings become insignificant. The concepts of birth and death, karma, and suffering are therefore inapplicable. One who achieves this status is called an "enlightened one." Buddha Sakyamuni - was a human being born about 2,500 years ago in the land known today as Nepal who achieved enlightenment at the age of 35. He set an excellent example for all human beings.

As I said before, Path 1 is designed for one who is able to divorce himself or herself entirely from worldly affairs and to practice vigorously just like Buddha, who gave up the king's throne that awaited him and went to the mountains to take up many kinds of difficult ascetic practices. This is like attempting to dig out the root of a big tree without first cutting down the branches. It should be considered as the highest standard set by Buddha that a human being can possibly achieve. Path 1, however, is not for everyone. Buddha therefore taught many other methods to enable human beings to realize Original Nature. I consider that these methods belong to Path 2.

All the methods in Path 2 can be described as aiming at one principle, that is, "harmony with Original Nature." Here we should note that the concept of self is still in existence. It is "I" who am in harmony with Original Nature. In other words, at the stage of cultivation which I have called Path 2, "I" and Original Nature are, mentally, still two separate entities. All the methods therefore lead to a goal of identifying "I" with Original Nature and, finally, "I am Original Nature and Original Nature is I." There is only Original Nature. And Original Nature is a term chosen for the convenience of people at the mundane level.

With this Principle, "harmony with Original Nature," clear in our minds, every action and every thought in our daily life could offer us abundant opportunities to practice harmony with Original Nature. At the mundane level, Original Nature can be more clearly specified as nonduality, nondiscrimination, and no self; or even more condensed, as no attachment. Therefore, in our daily life, those actions and thoughts which can be qualified as nonduality, nondiscrimination, and no self--or non attachment--are those in harmony with Original Nature. On the other hand, actions and thoughts that possess duality, discrimination, and concept of self, and are attached in one way or another, are not in harmony with Original Nature.

Now I wish to give you a few examples of how to practice in harmony with Original Nature; They have been useful in my personal practice. But, since each person has different karma, you may find another method more effective.

1. Fifteen minutes of meditation on vast space every day

You may look at the open sky on a clear day. Concentrate your effort to see as far out as you can. If a bird, an airplane, a wisp of cloud, or any kind of object comes into view, ignore it and don't let it distract you. If your eyes become tired, close them, but your mind should continuously "look" at the vast sky without wavering. The key to this practice can be found in the following verse taken from The One Hundred Thousand Songs of Milarepa, by Professor Garma C.C. Chang:

"Like the sky devote of edge or center, Meditate on vastness and infinity."

That is the teaching Milarepa gave to his woman disciple, Sahle-Aiu. It clearly emphasizes nonduality, nondiscrimination, and no self.

2. Fifteen minutes of meditation on energy every day

First, think of the outer skin of your entire body. The skin is matter and is therefore a form of energy. Then, think of your flesh. Flesh is also matter and therefore also a form of energy. The bones are also a form of energy The lungs, heart, stomach -- every part, from the outside to the inside and then from the inside to the outside, is a form of energy.

When you first begin this practice, repeat this process several times. You will reach the conclusion that everything in your body, and your body as a whole, is energy and nothing else.

Then, whatever you are sitting on is matter and thus energy. The air is energy. The warmth of the air is energy. Light is energy. People and animals are energy. The room, the house, the village, the city, the earth, then, the moon, the sun -- everything in the boundless space you can think of they are all energy. All are characterized by non duality and nondiscrimination.

Whenever your mind wavers and cannot keep expanding your vision of energy, then retreat to the point where your vision of energy is clear.

Since energy is a good analogy for Original Nature, this practice can be very effective. It is simple yet in harmony with Original Nature.

I presume that you all know how to sit for meditation, so I shall not describe it here. My booklet, "What We Can Learn From Buddhism," gives a brief yet complete description of how to sit. You might like to use it as a reference.

3. Practicing the perfection of giving (dana paramita)

Giving means to help or benefit others. Twenty-five years ago, when I first came to this country, I had the distinct impression that the people of this great nation have, in general, a warm generosity and willingness to help other people. I must admit, however, that that good impression has been gradually fading in recent years. I sincerely hope that this trend will be reversed. It is entirely up to each of you. Don't forget that the social environment is the effect of our common karma. According to Buddhism, there are three kinds of giving:

A) To help or benefit others by giving them the things they need. Food, clothing, shelter, vehicles, money, and many other items of a material nature are included in this category.

B) To help or benefit others by giving them right knowledge and correct view. In Buddhism the reference is especially to Dharma, i.e., the Buddha's teachings because according to Buddhism, Dharma is the most important knowledge that can help people to rid themselves of suffering. Broadly speaking, the teaching of proper knowledge and skill to people to enable them to be productive members of society is also giving under this category.

C) To help or benefit others by protecting them from various kinds of danger or alleviating their fears. This is called the giving of fearlessness. People who contribute to keeping a place, say, Central Park in New York City, secure and peaceful day and night for the citizens are, indeed, giving in this category. To save people from a ship in distress or from places hit by earthquakes, hurricanes, tidal waves, or other disasters, are good examples of this kind of giving. A good doctor or nurse who comforts a patient who has great fear is doing meritorious giving.

All of the above is giving, but it may not be the perfection of giving. You may remember that when we talked about karma, I said at one point that one who does good deeds with selfish motive receives limited merit, while one who does the same good deeds with no specific purpose or desire receive infinitely greater merit. Let me now describe the perfection of giving, which is one of the six Paramitas or perfections, taught by Buddha.

Perfection of giving means giving without duality, without discrimination, and without concept of self. Or, to put it another way, perfection of giving is giving without any idea as to who is the recipient, what is being given, or who the donor is. Therefore, giving conditionally, or with string attached, is a kind of giving but it is not the perfection of giving.

Giving with an expectation of reward is giving, but not the perfection of giving.

Giving with discrimination regarding the recipients, such as, 'I only donate to the church but not to the school,' is giving, but not the perfection of giving.

Giving for selfish reasons is giving; but it is not the perfection of giving.

The perfection of giving demands a mind of equality, non duality, nondiscrimination, and no self. Such giving is therefore in harmony with Original Nature.

For those who have not achieved the ability to be in harmony with Original Nature, intensive prayer to a more tangible supramundane authority, such as the gods of different religions, the Holy Mother Mary, Jesus Christ, and in Buddhism, Buddha Amitabha and Bodhisattva Khan Yin the two most popular names, all serve effective purposes when one is seriously ill, in danger, desperate, approaching death, and so forth. Such prayer, particularly for those who have had faith in one or more of the foregoing in their lives, could quickly bring back their concentration. The unwavering tranquility of one's mind is itself a process in harmony with Original Nature--the source of joy.

I thank you for your patience in listening so intently during these four sessions. You have probably noted that the key expression in these lectures has been Original Nature. It may be helpful to offer you, as my conclusion, the following quotation from Chapter 9 of The Holy teaching of Vimalakirti, by Dr. Robert A.F. Thurman, entitled, "The Dharma-Door of Nonduality":

Then, the Licchavi Vimalakirti asked those bodhisattvas, "Good Sirs, please explain how the bodhisattvas enter the Dharma-door of nonduality!"

Thereupon, thirty-one bodhisattvas expressed their views of nonduality. I quote three expressions as examples:

The bodhisattva Srigandha declared, "I' and 'mine' are two. If there is no presumption of a self, there will be no possessiveness. Thus the absence of presumption is the entrance into nonduality."

The bodhisattva Tisya declared, "'Good' and 'evil' are two. Seeking neither good nor evil, the understanding of the nonduality of the significant and the meaningless is the entrance into non duality."

The bodhisattva Suddhadhimukti declared, "To say, 'This is happiness,' and 'That is misery' is dualism. One who is free of all calculations, through the extreme purity of gnosis--his mind is aloof, like empty space; and thus he enters into nonduality."

Near the end we read:

When the bodhisattvas had given their explanations, they all addressed the crown prince Manjushri: "Manjushri, what is the bodhisattva's entrance into nonduality?"

Manjushri replied, "Good sirs, you have all spoken well. Nevertheless, all your explanations are themselves dualistic. To know no one teaching, to express nothing, to say nothing, to explain nothing, to announce nothing, to indicate nothing, and to designate nothing--that is the entrance into nonduality."

Then the crown prince Manjushri said to the Licchavi Vimalakirti, "We have all given our own teachings, noble sir. Now, may you elucidate the teaching of the entrance into the principle of nonduality! "

Thereupon, the Licchavi Vimalakirti kept his silence, saying nothing at all.

The crown prince Manjushri applauded the Licchavi Vimalakirti: "Excellent! Excellent, noble sir! This is indeed the entrance into the nonduality of the bodhisattvas. Here there is no use for syllables, sounds, and ideas."

Dear friends, why have I used so many words?

(the following lines were added after the lecture was delivered on November 22, 1976)

(At this point, Dr. Shen suddenly raised his voice.)

NOW, ANSWER MY QUESTION, QUICK! QUICK !
(The audience kept silent.)

Excellent! Excellent! We have so many vimalakirtis here.
(The audience then burst into laughter.)

Now you have experienced it. The very moment that you burst into laughter was the moment that you were in harmony with Original Nature. Perhaps you would all like to go home now and practice your harmony with Original Nature.

I thank you very much.

"Life is uncertain - Death is certain": This is a well known saying in Buddhism. Knowing very well that death is certain and it is a natural phenomenon that everyone has to face, we should not be afraid of death. Yet, instinctively, all of us fear death because we do not know how to think of its inevitability. We like to cling to our life and body and so develop too much craving and attachment.

A child comes into this world bringing joy and happiness unto all near and dear ones. Even the mother who had to bear extreme labour pains is pleased and delighted to behold her new-born child. She feels that all the trouble and pain borne by her were well worth it. However, by crying, the child seems to suggest it too has its share of suffering for coming into this world. The child grows into an adolescent and later into an adult, performing all sorts of good and bad deeds. He eventually grows old and finally bids farewell to this world leaving his kith and kin in deep sorrow. Such is the nature of existence of a human being. People try to evade and escape from the clutches of death but no one is able to do so. At the moment of death, they have their minds hovering over their hoard of acquired wealth, unduly worrying about their dear children surrounding them. Last but not least, they keep evincing much concern over their own precious bodies, which, despite the tender care and attention lavished by them are now worn out, decaying and exhausted. It grieves one's heart to separate oneself from the body. It is unbearable though unavoidable. This is the way most people take leave of this world - with moans and groans. The pangs of death are considered dreadful, an attitude fed by ignorance.

Fear of Death

Men are disturbed not by external things, but by beliefs and imaginations they conjure up in their minds with regard to the form of their future lives. Death, for example, is not by itself dreadful: the dread or terror exists only in our minds. It is not often that we are brave enough to come face to face with the thought of our own mortality. Insistence upon the truth of suffering may seem horrible and unacceptable to the mind which is unable to face realities, but it certainly helps to reduce or eliminate the dread of fear by knowing how to face death. Once life is launched, like a bullet it rushes to its destination - death. Realizing thus, we must bravely face that natural occurrence. To be considered free in life, we must also be free from the fear of death. Fear only comes to those who are not able to comprehend the laws of Nature. "Wheresoever fear arises, it arises in the fool, not in the wise man," says the Buddha in the Anguttara Nikaya. Fears are nothing more than states of mind. Remember what science teaches us about the process of dying? It is only a physiological erosion of the human body. We needlessly frighten ourselves with imagined or anticipated horrors which never come to pass. As a famous physician, Sir William Osler puts it:- "In my wide clinical experience, most human beings die really without pain or fear."

A veteran nurse once said: "It has always seemed to me a major tragedy that so many people go through life haunted by the fear of death - only to find when it comes that it's as natural as life itself. For few are afraid to die when they get to the very end. In all my experience only one seemed to feel any terror - a woman who had done her sister a wicked thing which it was too late to put right."

"Something strange and beautiful happens to men and women when they come to the end of the road. All fear, all horror disappears. I have often watched a look of happy wonder dawn in their eyes when they realise this is true. It is all part of the goodness of Nature."

Attachment to life on earth creates the unnatural fear of death. It creates strong anxiety on life; the man who will never take risks even for what is right. He lives in fear worrying that some illness or accident might snuff out the precious little life he cherishes. Realizing that death is inevitable, the one who loves life on earth will go into a devout prayer expressing the hope that his soul will survive in heaven. No man can be happy in such a tempest of fear and hope. Yet it is hard to despise or ignore these manifestations of the instinct for self-preservation. There is however a method of overcoming this fear. Forget the concept of self; turn one's love of the inward outwards, i.e. provide humanitarian service and to shower love on others. Whoever constantly keeps in mind the fact that he would someday be subjected to death and that death is inevitable, would be eager to fulfil his duties to his fellow human beings before death, and this would certainly make him heedful in respect of this world and the next. Being engrossed in service to others, you will soon release yourself from the heavy selfish attachments, hopes, vanity, pride and self-righteousness.

Illness and Death

Both illness and death are natural happenings in our lives and must be accepted as such with understanding. According to modern psychological theory, undue mental stress is caused by our refusal to face and accept life's realities. This undue stress, unless overcome or subdued, actually causes grave physical illness. Maintaining a sense of undue worry and despair over an illness will certainly make it worse. As for death, it must never be feared by those who are pure in heart and action. We are all a combination of mind and matter and as such there is actually no individual self to die. The kammic reactions arising from past evil deeds may linger with us on our rebirth thus causing us to shoulder the kammic sufferings in a new life. Such an eventuality can be obviated if we make every effort to acquire merit by leading a virtuous life and doing meritorious deeds wherever and whenever possible. By doing so we can face death bravely and realistically since in accordance with the teachings of Buddhism there is no 'saviour' upon whom we could entrust our burdens in order to relieve ourselves from the consequences of our wrong actions. We should constantly remind ourselves of the Buddha's advice: "Be ye refuges and islands unto yourselves; labour on with diligence." Buddhists should not go into grief and deep mourning over the deaths of relatives and friends. There can be no halting of the wheel of circumstance. When a man dies, the kammic sequence of his conduct passes on into a new being. Kith and kin, friends and relatives can accompany the dead body up to the grave, but not further. Only a man's deeds, good or bad, go forth with him. Those left behind should bear their bereavement with calmness and understanding. Death is an inevitable process of this world. That is the one thing which is certain in this universe. Forests may be turned into cities and cities into sand dunes. Where mountains exist, a lake may be formed. Uncertainty exists everywhere but death is certain. All else is momentary. We had our forefathers, and they in turn had their own, but where are they all now? They have all passed away.

Let not the sophisticated assume that a pessimistic view of life is being presented here. This is the most realistic view of all realisms. Why should we be unrealistic and blind our eyes to real facts? For does not death consume everything? It certainly does. Let this not be forgotten. The role of death is to make every man aware of his destiny; that however high he may be placed, whatever advanced aid in technology or medical science he may have, his end is all the same, either in a coffin or merely reduced to a handful of ashes. The sequence of birth and death is a continuing process until we become perfect.

Man's Influence Persists

The Buddha said: "Man's body turns to dust, but his name or influence persists." The influence of a past life is sometimes more far-reaching, more potent than that held by the living body with certain limitations. We occasionally act on thoughts inspired by personalities whose mortal remains have turned to dust. In our accomplishments, such thoughts also play an important role. Every living person is deemed a composite of all his ancestors who have gone before him. In this sense, we may assume that the past heroes, great philosophers, sages, poets and musicians of every race are still with us. As we link our selves to the past martyrs and thinkers, we are able to share their wise thoughts, their noble ideals and even the imperishable music of the ages. Even though their bodies are dead, their influence lives on. The body is nothing but an abstract generalisation for a constantly changing combination of chemical constituents. Man must realize that his life is but a drop in an ever-flowing river and must be happy to contribute his part to the great stream which is called life.

Not knowing the nature of his life, man is sunk in the mud of ignorance of this world. He weeps and wails. But when he realises what his true nature is, he renounces all transient things and seeks the Eternal state. Prior to achieving the Eternal state he will have to face death again and again. Since death itself is meaningless, man should not try to overcome the continuous repeated births and deaths.

According to Buddhism, this is not the first and last life we have in this world. If you do good with confidence, you can have a better future life. On the other hand, if you feel that you do not want to be reborn again and again, you should work towards this end by making every effort to develop the mind by eradicating all craving and other mental impurities.

Buddhist Philosophy

The Noble saint who has attained the stage of highest perfection does not weep at the passing away of those dear and near to him as he has completely eradicated his emotional feelings. Ven. Anuruddha, who was an Arahant, did not weep at the passing away of the Buddha. However, Ven. Ananda, who was at that time only a Sotapanna, having attained only the first stage of sainthood, could not but express his deep sorrow. The weeping bhikkhu had to be reminded of the Buddha's view on situations of this nature, as follows:-

"Has not the Buddha told us, Ananda, that what is born, what comes to being, and what is put together, is subject to dissolution? That is the nature of all conditioned formations; to arise and pass away - Having once arisen they must pass away - And when such formations cease completely, then comes Peace Supreme."

These words describe the foundation on which the structure of Buddhist philosophy is built.

Cause of Sorrow

The cause of our grief and sorrow is Attachment in all its various forms. If we want to overcome sorrow, we have to give up attachment - attachment not only to persons but also to possessions. This is the ultimate truth; this is the lesson that death signifies. Attachment provides us many things to satisfy our emotion and to lead a worldly life. But the same attachment becomes in the end the cause of all our sorrows. Unless we learn this lesson, death can strike us and fill us with terror. The fact is beautifully illustrated by the Buddha, who said: - "Death will take away a man though he is attached to his children and his possessions, just as a great flood takes away a sleeping village."

This saying implies that if the village had not been asleep but remained awake and alert, the havoc created by the flood could have been avoided.

Death is Universal

Let us now examine how the Buddha solved this problem for two persons who, through attachment, were both deeply grieved by death. One person was Kisagotami. Her only child had died after being attacked by a serpent. She went to the Buddha carrying the dead child in her arms to ask for help. The Buddha asked her to bring a few mustard seeds from a family where no one had died. But she could not find such a family. Every house she visited was either in mourning or had mourned over a death at one time or another. Then she realized the bitter truth; that death is universal. Death strikes all and spares none. Sorrow is the heritage of everyone.

The other person whom the Buddha advised was Patacara. Her case was sadder. Within a short period she lost her two children, husband, brother, parents, and all her possessions. Losing her senses, she ran naked and wild in the streets until she met the Buddha. The Buddha brought her back to sanity by explaining that death is to be expected as a natural phenomenon in all living beings.

"You have suffered from similar situations, not once, Patacara, but many times during your previous existences. For a long time you suffered due to the deaths of a father, a mother, children or relatives. While you were thus suffering, you indeed shed more tears than there is water in the ocean."

At the end of the talk, Patacara realised the uncertainty of life. Both Patacara and Kisagotami comprehended suffering and each learned through their tragic experiences. By deeply understanding the First

Noble Truth of "suffering," the other three Noble Truths were also understood. "Whoso monks, comprehends suffering," said the Buddha, "also comprehends the arising of suffering, the cessation of suffering, and the path leading to the cessation of suffering."

The Five Aggregates

Death is the dissolution of //Khandhas//. The Khandhas are the five aggregates of perception, sensation, mental formations, consciousness and corporeality or matter. The first four are mental aggregates or //nama//, forming the unit of consciousness. The fifth, //rupa// is the material or physical aggregate. This psycho-physical combination is conventionally named an individual, person or ego. Therefore what entities that exist are not individuals as such, but the two primary constituents of mind and matter, which are rare phenomena. We do not see the five aggregates as phenomena but as an entity because of our deluded minds, and our innate desire to treat these as a self in order to pander to our self-importance.

We will be able to see things as they truly are if we only have patience and the will to do so. If we turn inwards to the recesses of our own minds and note with just that bare attention, note objectively without projecting an ego in the process, and then cultivate this practice for a sufficient length of time, as laid down by the Buddha in the Sati Patthana Sutta, then we will see these five aggregates, not as an entity, but as a series of physical and mental processes. Then we will not mistake the superficial for the real. We will then see that these aggregates arise and disappear in rapid succession, never being the same for two consecutive moments, never static but always in flux, never //being// but always //becoming//.

Rebirth

The four mental aggregates, viz., consciousness and the three other groups of mental factors forming Nama or the unit of consciousness, go on uninterruptedly, arising and disappearing as before, but not in the same setting, because that setting is no more. They have to find immediately a fresh physical base as it were, with which to function - a fresh material layer appropriate and suitable for all the aggregates to function in harmony. Kamma acts as a law and this law operates to re-set the aggregates after death. The result is "re-birth".

A Bundle of Elements and Energies

In brief, the combination of the five aggregates is called birth. Existence of these aggregates as a bundle is called life. Dissolution of these things is called death. And recombination of these aggregates is called rebirth. However, it is not easy for an ordinary man to understand how these so called aggregates could recombine. A proper understanding of the nature of elements, mental energies and the law of Kamma and co-operation of cosmic energies is important in this respect. To some, this is a simple and natural occurrence. To them death means the separation of the five elements and thereafter nothing remains. To some, it means transmigration of the soul from one body to another; and to others, it means indefinite suspension of the soul; in other words, waiting for the Day of Judgment. To Buddhists, however, death is nothing but a temporary end of a temporary phenomenon. It is not the complete annihilation of this so-called being.

Causes of Death

According to Buddhism, Death can occur in any one of these four ways.

i. it can be due to the exhaustion of the life span assigned to beings of that particular species. This type of death is called Ayukkhaya;

ii. it can be due to the exhaustion of the Kammic energy that caused the birth of the deceased. This is called Kamma-kkhaya;

iii. it can be due to the simultaneous exhaustion of the above mentioned two causes - Ubhayakkhaya; and

iv. Lastly, it can be due to external circumstances, viz, accidents, untimely happenings - working of natural phenomena or due to a Kamma of a previous existence not referred to in (ii). This is called Upacchedake.

There is an excellent analogy to explain these four types of death. It is the analogy of the oil lamp. The light in the oil lamp can be extinguished due to any one of four causes:-

i. The wick in the lamp burns up. This is likened to death through the exhaustion of the life span;

ii. The consummation of the oil in the lamp is likened to death through exhaustion of the Kammic energy;

iii. The consummation of the oil in the lamp and the burning off of the wick at the same time - is likened to death occurring through the combination of causes described in (i) and (ii) occurring simultaneously; and

iv. The effect of external factors such as the wind blowing out the light - is likened to death caused through external factors.

Therefore, Kamma alone is not the cause of death. There are external contributory causes also. The Buddha's teaching categorically states that Kamma does not explain all happenings in our lives.

Face Facts

How should one best face this unavoidable occurrence? By being forewarned - that is, by reflecting that death will, and must come sooner or later. This does not mean that Buddhists should view life with gloom. Death is real, and has to be faced - and Buddhism is a religion or reason that trains its followers to face facts, however unpleasant they may be. The Founder of the Sikh religion Guru Nanak said "The world is afraid of death, to me it brings bliss." It clearly shows that great and noble people are not afraid of death but are prepared to accept it. Many great people have sacrificed their lives for the welfare of others. Their names are recorded in the history of the world in golden letters for posterity.

Death is Inevitable

It is rather paradoxical that although we so often see death taking its toll of lives, we seldom pause to reflect that we too can similarly sooner or later be victims of death. With our strong attachment to life, we are disinclined to carry with us the morbid thought, although a reality, that death is an absolute certainty. We prefer to put off this awful thought behind us as far away as possible - deluding ourselves that death is a far-away phenomenon, something not to be worried about. We should be courageous enough to face facts. We must be prepared to face stark reality. Death is a factual happening. If we appreciate such eventualities and equip ourselves with the realisation that death is inevitable; even that has to be accepted as a normal occurrence and not as a dreaded event which we should be able to face when it eventually comes, with calmness, courage and confidence.

Our Duties and Responsibilities

With the certain knowledge that death will ultimately overtake us one day, we should decide, with the same calmness, courage and confidence, to discharge our duties and responsibilities towards our immediate dependants. We should not procrastinate our responsible duties. We should not leave things for tomorrow when they can be done today. We should make good use of time and spend our lives usefully. Our duties to our wives, husbands and children deserve priority and should be performed in due time. We should execute our last will and testament, without waiting for the last moment, so that we may not cause undue distress, difficulties and problems to our families due to our neglect. Death may call at any time - it is no respecter of person or time. We should be able to face this ultimate event bravely with hope and confidence if we prepare for the next existence.

Craving and Ignorance

Can death be overcome? The answer is - Yes! Death exists because of birth. This repetition of countless births is called Samsara. If this cycle of existence is to be stopped, it can be cut off only at the stage of Avijja (Ignorance) and Tanha (Craving) - These are the roots in this cycle of births and have to be exterminated. Therefore, if we cut off Craving and Ignorance - birth is overcome, death conquered, Samsara is transcended and Nibbana attained.

We should try to understand that everything in this universe is uncertain. Existence is only a vision. When we analyse everything either scientifically or philosophically, in the end we find nothing but void.

"To be afraid of dying is like being afraid of discarding an old worn-out garment". (Gandhi)

It is hard to bear the loss of people whom we love because of our attachment to them. This happened to Visakha a well-known lady devotee during the time of the Buddha. When she lost her beloved grand-daughter she visited the Buddha to seek advice in her sorrow.

"Visakha, would you like to have as many sons and grandsons as there are children in this town?" asked the Buddha. 'Yes, Sir, I would indeed!'

'Then, Visakha, in such a case would you cry for all of them when they die? Visakha, those who have a hundred things beloved, they have a hundred sorrows. He who has nothing beloved, has no sorrow. Such persons are free from sorrow.'

When we develop attachment, we also must be prepared to pay the price of sorrow when separation takes place.

The love of life can sometimes develop into a morbid fear of death. We will not take any risks even for a rightful cause. We live in fear that an illness or accident will put an end to our seemingly precious life.

Realising that death is a certainty, we hope and pray for the survival of the soul in heaven for our own security and preservation. Such beliefs are based on strong craving for continued existence.

Each and every individual should be aware of the role of death in his or her destiny. Whether royalty or commoner, rich or poor, strong or weak, a man's final resting place for his body is either in a coffin lying buried six feet underground or in an urn or in the water.

All human beings face and share the same fate. Due to ignorance of the true nature of life, we often weep and wail. When once we realise the true nature of life, we can face the impermanence of all component things and seek liberation. Until and unless we achieve our liberation from worldly conditions, we will have to face death over and over again. And in this respect, too, the role of death is very clear. If a person finds death to be unbearable, then he should make every endeavour to overcome this cycle of birth and death.

Contemplation on Death

Why should we think about death? Why should we contemplate it? Not only did the Buddha encourage us to speak about death, he also encouraged us to contemplate it and reflect on it regularly. That which is born will die. The mind and body which arise at the time of conception develop, grow and mature. In other words, they follow the process of ageing. We call it growing up at first, then growing old, but it is just a single process of maturing, developing, and evolving ultimately towards inevitable death.

Today, according to a world record, about 200,000 people die, on the average, everyday. Apparently about 70 million people die every year.

We are not used to contemplate death or come to terms with it. What we usually do is to avoid it and live as if we were never going to die. As long as there is fear of death, life itself is not being lived to its fullest and at its best. So one of the very fundamental reasons for contemplating death, for making this reality fully conscious, is that of overcoming fear. The contemplation of death is not for making us depressed or morbid; it is rather for the purpose of helping to free ourselves from fear. The second reason is that contemplation of death will change the way we live and our attitudes towards life. The values that we have in life will change quite drastically once we stop living as if we are going to live forever, and we will start living in a quite different way.

The third reason is to develop the ability to approach and face death in the right and peaceful way.

The contemplation of death has three-fold benefits:

- relieving fear;
- bringing a new quality to our lives, enabling us to live our lives with proper values; and
- enabling us to die in dignity.

It enables us to live a good life and die a good death. What else do we need?

The contemplation on the following factors are encouraged in Buddhism:
- I am of the nature to age, I have not gone beyond ageing;
- I am of the nature to sicken, I have not gone beyond sickness;
- I am subjected to my own kamma and I am not free from kammic effects;

- I am of the nature to die, I have not gone beyond dying; and
- All that is mine, beloved and pleasing, will change, will become otherwise, will become separated from me.

When we contemplate this reality with a peaceful mind and bring it into consciousness, it has a powerful effect in overcoming the fear of old age, sickness, death and separation. It is not for making us morbid, rather it is for freeing ourselves from fear. That is why we contemplate death; it is not that we are eagerly looking forward to dying, but that we want to live and die without fear.

Death is Part of Life

Death comes to all and is part of our life cycle. Some die in their prime, others in old age, but all must inevitably die. Uninvited we came into this world and unbidden we leave it. Inevitably I am going to die - so does everybody, every plant, every form, every living being, which follows the same path. Soon it will be autumn, the leaves will fall off the trees. We do not cry, it is natural, that is what the leaves are supposed to do at the end of the season. Human beings experience the same thing.

Religious people usually have less fear of death than very materialistic people, because materialists are particularly interested only in this life to satisfy their five-fold senses.

But from the Buddhist perspective, death is not the end and each birth too is not the beginning of a life. In fact death is the beginning of life and conversely birth is the ending of life. It is just one part of a whole process, a whole cyclic process of birth, death, rebirth and dying again. If one has some understanding of this on-going process, death begins to lose its ability to create morbid terror, because it is not so final after all. It is only the end of a cycle; just one cycle along the way and then the way continues ad infinitum with other cycles. The leaves fall off the trees, but it is not the end. They go back to the soil and nourish the roots; next year the tree has new leaves. The same can be said of human life. Conditioned by the moment of death is rebirth. An understanding of this basic principle helps to relieve ourselves of the fear about death.

Living Consciously

We live our lives in many foolish ways without even considering how much time we waste for nothing. How much time have we wasted today worrying about next year, about the next twenty years, thinking about the future, to the extent that we have not been fully living even this very day?

And our values in life will change. What is important in life? What is motivating us? What is the driving factor in our lives? If we really contemplate death it may cause us to reconsider our values. It does not matter how much money we have for we cannot take any of it with us. Even our own body has to be left behind for others to dispose of in one way or another; it is just a heap of refuse left behind. We cannot take our precious body with us when we leave this world.

The quality of life is more important than mere material acquisitions. The quality of life is primarily the quality of our minds. How we are living today may be more important to us than many other external things.

But the condition for rebirth, and that of rebirth is conditioned by death and the quality of the mind. This is one thing we take with us. This is the one inheritance that we do not leave behind for others:

I am the owner of my kamma, heir to my kamma,

Born of my kamma, related to my kamma,
abide supported by my kamma,

Whatever kamma I shall do, for good or for ill,
of that I will be the heir.

All that which will follow us will be the qualities that we develop within us, the qualities of mind, the spiritual qualities and the good or bad qualities. These are all what we inherit. These are the conditions which will determine our rebirth and shape the future. These in turn will give rise to a new value in our lives. We may enjoy the millions we have already gained but it is more important that we live more peacefully and start to build up some virtuous qualities. It can have a very good effect on the way we live our lives and on the values we develop. It is not just a matter of being successful; it is how we become successful.

Dying a Good Death

Having considered all of these, if dying becomes no longer an alarming event but an actual experience, we can with confidence face it. Not only that we can also do a lot towards dying a good death. If we have led a good life, dying is easier. But regardless of how we have lived, we can still endeavour to die a good death. To help in the dying process, we stress very much the development of the same quality of fearlessness.

For many people, it's more the fear of pain and the fear of separation from all their loved ones, more than anything else, that is fearsome. At the time of dying, encouragement and reassurance are most essential. For a start you need to reassure yourself. The pain indeed will be excruciating and will be difficult to bear, but we are fortunate in that advances in modern medicines make it possible to reduce the amount of physical pain a human being has to experience before death. Pain need not be such an overwhelming object of fear.

I usually reassure a dying person, such as someone who is terminally ill, for example with cancer, that he will not needlessly be allowed to suffer and, that prompt treatment will be given to alleviate his pain. An important result of this is that the patient can relax and die more peacefully.

The other worry is the inevitable separation from one's possessions. Of course, if we've contemplated this before, it's a lot easier. We know that to come together implies separation. If a dying person hasn't done this kind of contemplation, then you need to gently encourage and reassure him or her that the children and those left behind will be well taken care of. They need to be reassured that it's all right, that there are friends to take care of them; they need to be encouraged to relax and be peaceful, not to worry about other things, that they'll all be taken care of.

The whole emphasis is on trying to encourage the dying person to become more peaceful. How can one die a good death? The Buddhist way is to maintain an atmosphere of peace in the room where someone is dying. It's not very conducive to have people shouting, screaming and crying. What does that do to the poor person who has this very important thing to do, to die? They make it very difficult for the dying person to die peacefully. It's good if friends and relatives who are present, show by their presence that they care, that they love, that they are willing to contribute something to support.

"Religious symbols are very useful and come in handy in such situations. If the dying person is a Buddhist, then a small Buddha statue, and possibly the presence of Buddhist monks with soothing words of chanting will be very beneficial so as to allow the dying person to pass away with the greatest peace and dignity. It's a wonderful thing for them to move into their new life in the best possible way."

(Ajahn Jagaro)

Peaceful Death

Everyone hopes and desires to have a peaceful death after having fulfilled his lifetime duties and obligations. But how many have actually prepared themselves for such an eventuality? How many, for instance, have taken the trouble to fulfil their obligations to their families, loved ones, friends, country, religion and their own destiny? It will be difficult for them to die peacefully if they have not fulfilled any of these obligations.

We must learn to overcome the fear of death by realising that the gods are also subjected to it. Those who have allowed fleeting time to pass away frivolously will have good cause to lament later on when they themselves are nearing the end of their lives.

When people see their own lives as being only a drop in an ever-flowing river, they will be moved to contribute even their little part to the great stream of life. The wise know that to live they have to work for their liberation by avoiding evil, doing good and purifying their minds. People who understand life according to the Teachings of the Buddha never worry about death. Death is no cause for sorrow, but it would indeed be sorrowful if one dies without having done something for oneself and for the world.

I Died Today

David Morris was a well known Western Buddhist scholar who died at the age of 85. Soon after his death the writer of this booklet received a letter from him (obviously he had written it earlier with instructions for it to be posted on his death.) It went like this, 'You will be happy to know that I died today. There are two reasons for this. Firstly, you will be relieved to know that my suffering from the sickness has finally ended. And secondly, since I became a Buddhist I have faithfully observed the five precepts. As a result you know that my next life cannot be a miserable one'. Life is like a dream. Death is a factual happening and rebirth a natural occurrence. In preparing for that eventuality one would either have to continue or to end the repeated cycle of births and deaths so as to be free from suffering and this is what human intelligence is all about.

PREFACE

This year a large number of monks and novices came to be ordained and to live together here at Wat Asokaram for the Rains -- some of them planning eventually to leave the monkhood, some of them to stay. This being the case, I wrote down a piece explaining and analyzing our duties for their information, so that they would have something of religious value to keep and take with them for the progress of the community of monks and novices in the days to come.

After the piece was written and read aloud to the group, it seemed appropriate for use in the area of administering the Sangha at large, and so it has been printed for free distribution as a gift of Dhamma, in order that Buddhism may prosper and thrive for the well-being of us all.

I would like to explain to the community spending the Rains at Wat Asokaram this year what our duties are, so that our sense of our responsibilities in our practice will be in line with the aims and directives of those who have been placed in charge.

The administration of the Sangha, as set out by the ecclesiastical authorities of Thailand, is divided into four departments:

I. The Department of Internal Governance.
II. The Department of Education.
III. The Department of Building and Development.
IV. The Department of Spreading the Dhamma.

Each of these departments, if its activities were in line with its aims, would cause the religion to prosper. But I have come to see that each of them is so deficient as to be destructive -- bringing about, to a great extent, the corruption of monks and novices. This is why I would like to give the monks and novices here some sense of their duties and of the true aims of each of these departments. Otherwise, governance will turn into 'covernance' -- covering up what we don't want to be seen.

Each of these departments is divided into two sections: the central office and the offices in the out-lying regions. In the central office, the responsibility of the ecclesiastical authorities of both sects, Dhammayutika and Mahanikaya, is to co-operate in firmly carrying out the duties of each department in the area of central administration. As for the out-lying regions, the responsibility of the ecclesiastical authorities on the regional, provincial, district, and township levels, and of the abbots of all temples, is to train the officers of each department in their respective jurisdictions to be firm in carrying out their stated duties. Any individual who proves incompetent in a particular area should not be placed in charge of the corresponding department.

Thus I would now like to explain the duties of each department in a way that will bring about order, in line not only with the laws and regulations of the Sangha, but also with the disciplinary standards (Vinaya) and with rectitude (Dhamma) -- because all of these laws and regulations need to be both right and up to standard if they are to lead to the well-being of the religion.

Governance is of three sorts:

A. Governing by regulations of the Sangha.
B. Governing by Vinaya (Discipline).
C. Governing by Dhamma (Rectitude).

A. //Governing by regulations of the Sangha// is as follows: The ecclesiastical chief of each region has the right, the authority, and the responsibility to administer his jurisdiction in accordance with all of his stipulated duties, including the procedures to be followed in appointing officials on the regional, provincial, district, and township levels; in appointing the abbots of temples, preceptors, and minor officials; and in delegating responsibilities on each level. This being the case, each of these officials should use his powers strictly in accordance with the regulations and guidelines set down by the Sangha authorities. Anyone who sees that he is unqualified in a particular area should not accept appointment in that area. At the same time, those who make the appointments, if they see that a particular individual is unqualified, should not appoint him to a position of responsibility. If he is appointed, it will be damaging to that area and destructive to the religion.

B. //Governing by Vinaya//: One should explain to those who come under one's authority the various procedures connected with the Vinaya so that they will understand how to follow them.

1. Point out, for example, how an //apalokana-kamma// is to be performed so as to be in line with the Vinaya. If there are discrepancies from the norm, point them out and correct them.

2. Point out how and in what sort of places a //natti-kamma// is to be performed.

3. Point out what sorts of acts should be performed as //natti-dutiya-kamma//, how they are to be performed, where, when, and with how large a chapter of monks.

4. Point out what sorts of acts should be performed as //natti-catuttha-kamma//, on what sorts of occasions, and with how large a chapter of monks so as to be correct according to procedure.

On the whole, there are still great discrepancies in following these procedures even within the individual sects. When we compare the different sects, the differences are even greater. This being the case, whose responsibility is it to govern the Sangha so that there is uniformity throughout?

To have standards means to weld discipline to justice -- or in other words, Dhamma and Vinaya. For example, we should have standards in the way we worship and chant -- how the words are to be pronounced according to the Magadha and Sanyoga traditions, and which tradition to use on which occasions. There should be guidelines concerning this that are consistently followed everywhere, and similar guidelines concerning the way we dress and use the necessities of life, so that we will all be orderly and in proper line with one another. Otherwise, there will be discrepancies, high and low. If there is order, however, even the differences of high and low will present an acceptable appearance. Having standards is thus an important part of governance. If the authorities were really sincere about carrying out their duties, instead of simply letting things slide, it would help lead to the growth and prosperity of the religion. On the whole, though, there is a tendency in the area of governance not to look after things and simply to let them be. This has led to factions and splits within the monkhood, each group taking offense at the way other groups behave.

Thus close adherence to the Vinaya and to the standards of order would lead to concord with no need for force or compulsion: concord that would come of its own from the good and noble standards of the religion.

> When the lotuses are gathered unbruised,
> the water stays clear:
> This is where the virtues > of those who can govern appear.

Every official -- and every monk and novice as well -- should be strict in keeping his personal conduct within the bounds of the Vinaya, so as not to abolish any of the training rules by means of his behavior. In other words, whatever has been set down by the Buddha should not be abolished through not observing it; and at the same time, whatever was not set down by the Buddha should not be established as a new observance through the example of one's behavior.

There are many kinds of standards and procedures related to the Vinaya that must be studied, practiced and observed. Taken together, they are called //vinaya-kamma//. Some //vinaya-kamma// are our own personal responsibility in training ourselves. For example --

1. //Kaya-kamma//: Act only in ways that are correct in light of the Vinaya and that are called '//karaniya-kicca//,' things to be done (such as observing the precepts of the Patimokkha). Whatever goes against the Buddha's ordinances should be renounced. Such things are termed '//akaraniya-kicca//,' things not to be done.

2. //Vaci-kamma//: Any words whose purpose would be incorrect in light of the Vinaya should not be spoken in any circumstances. Speak only those words that would be classed as Right Speech.

3. //Mano-kamma//: We are bound to have thoughts that tend toward the accumulation of defilement and lead to transgressions of the training rules, such as //abhijjha//: greed focused on the four necessities of life (food, clothing, shelter, and medicine); //byapada//: ill will and malevolence; //miccha-ditthi//: wrong views that would draw the mind into ways running counter to the standards of the Vinaya.

If we don't correct such mental states, we are bound to break the training rules. For this reason, we should establish ourselves in all four of the Principles of Purity (//parisuddhisila//) --

a. //Patimokkha-sanvara-sila//: Restraining our thoughts, words, and deeds so as to show respect for all of the major and minor rules of the basic monastic code.

b. //Indriya-sanvara-sila//: Keeping watch over our senses of sight, hearing, smell, taste, feeling, and ideation, so as to keep them quiet and restrained, and to do away with any defilements pertaining to the training rules.

c. //Ajiva-parisuddhi-sila//: Maintaining our livelihood in an honest and above-board manner, not asking for anything, by word or deed, in circumstances ruled out by the Vinaya; training ourselves to have few wants; keeping our conduct in line with the standards of the Vinaya; searching for the necessities of life with the proper attitude in each stage of the search --

(1) //Pubba-cetana//: When the thought first occurs to the mind, keep it in line so as not to deviate from the Vinaya.

(2) //Muncaya-cetana//: When going through the actions of searching, maintain purity in thought and deed.

(3) //Aparapara-cetana//: Once the desired item has been obtained, use it in line with the regulations laid down in the Vinaya. This is called --

d. //Paccavekkhana-sila//: Reflecting carefully before using things. The act of reflection gives results on many levels:

-- We should first reflect on our thoughts, words, and deeds while using the item to see if they are in line with the Vinaya.

-- Then we should reflect further on the fact that all things are made up of impersonal elements or properties, foul and repugnant; that they are inconstant, stressful and not-self -- not beings, not individuals, not 'my self' or anyone else's.

//sunno sabbo//:
All things are empty, with no one in charge.

When we consider things correctly in accordance with the standards of the Vinaya, we are genuinely exercising good internal governance over ourselves. The ultimate standards for judging clearly whether or not we are governing ourselves well are as follows:

(1) Whatever maxim or rule leads one to behave with a mind tinged

by sensual desire is neither Dhamma nor Vinaya.

(2) Whatever behavior aims at the creation of suffering for oneself or for others is neither Dhamma nor Vinaya.

(3) Whatever behavior leads to the accumulation of defilement is neither Dhamma nor Vinaya.

(4) Whatever behavior aims at status and prestige is neither Dhamma nor Vinaya.

(5) Whatever behavior leads away from having few wants is neither Dhamma nor Vinaya.

(6) Whatever behavior aims at entanglement with others is neither Dhamma nor Vinaya.

(7) Whatever behavior leads to laziness and carelessness is neither Dhamma nor Vinaya.

(8) Whatever behavior makes one a burden to others is neither Dhamma nor Vinaya.

A person who behaves in any of the above ways has not truly taken the Buddha as his teacher, for as the Buddha said, the Dhamma and Vinaya are our teachers in his place. Any behavior that does not follow the Buddha's teachings should be regarded as something not to be done. We should restrict our behavior to those things that should be done in our own areas of responsibility. For example, behave so as to extract yourself from sensual desires; so as to gain release from suffering; so as not to accumulate defilements within yourself; so as to have few wants: If you happen to receive many possessions, share them with others. Behave so as to be satisfied with what you already have, and know how to care for and repair what you have so that it will become better. Behave in a way that leads to physical and mental solitude. Be persistent and energetic in doing good in line with your duties. Behave so as not to be a burden to others -- so as to be light in body and mind. To behave in these ways is truly to be established in the Dhamma and Vinaya.

To be able to conduct yourself in this manner means that you are able to govern yourself. And when a person can govern himself, he develops authority from within, through the disciplinary standards, enabling him to govern others well.

This is what is meant by 'governing by Vinaya.'

C. //Governing by Dhamma//: This means to govern with one's own inner quality as a person, i.e., having rectitude constantly in the heart; keeping the mind firmly established in Right View by fostering discernment through the practice of meditation; developing Right Concentration so as to wipe out the fetters of sexual lust -- which include, for example, sensual desire (//Kama-chanda//), a willingness to give in to sensual moods, which tends toward mental pain and stress. When a person's mind falls under the power of such fetters, it means that there is no quality to him. For the mind to lack quality means that it has fallen in with the mental Hindrances (//Nivarana//):

1. //Kama-chanda// (sensual desire) or sexual lust: indulging in sensual moods, taking pleasure in sensual desires that arise within and lead one to take pleasure in sensual objects -- a sign that the heart isn't centered in the proper way. This then leads to //patigha//: The mind is 'struck,' sometimes to its satisfaction, sometimes not, which is the basis for:

2. //Byapada//: ill will and malevolence.

3. //Thina-middha//: discouragement, apathy, laziness; not making the effort to center the mind in the factors of //jhana//; not developing a theme of meditation in the mind. The mind thus surrenders to lethargy and discouragement, abandoning its duties and responsibilities. This makes it restless and a prey to distraction, unable to put a halt to its train of thought. This is called --

4. //Uddhacca-kukkucca//. When this is the case, then no matter how much Dhamma one may study, the heart is still dark and blinded. Whatever one knows or sees is unclear. One's conduct is lax and lacking, unable to progress to anything of higher value. For the heart to be caught on a snag like this is termed --

5. //Vicikiccha//: doubt, uncertainty, indecision, an inability to go forward or turn back. When this is the case, the mind is classed as having no quality. In other words, it lacks the concentration that will give rise to discernment and the skill of release.

Those, however, who can escape from the Hindrances and center the mind into //jhana// or concentration will give rise to discernment: the power to keep their defilements within the bounds of rectitude and to unbind their goodness so that it can govern others effortlessly, achieving their own well-being and that of others through the power of their governance. They will awaken from the mundane world, and the supreme good -- Dhamma -- will appear within them. This is what it means for the heart to have quality.

Most of us, by and large, have no constant quality in our hearts. Instead, we go looking for quality in things outside and so can never succeed or find security. When this is the case, we're unfit to govern ourselves -- and if we're unfit to govern ourselves, then to govern others for the sake of their betterment will be extremely difficult.

This concludes our discussion of the Department of Internal Governance and the duties of those who accept responsibility in this area.

This is all there is to the Department of Internal Governance. Whoever has responsibilities in this area must constantly bear his duties in mind if he is to contribute to the true prosperity of the religion. Otherwise, the establishment of this department will be empty and in vain, yielding no full-fledged benefits.

The point to remember is that the governance of the Sangha in Thailand is of three sorts:

A. Governance by regulation and law -- the legislative act setting up the constitution of the Sangha; the Sangha directives and by-laws.
B. Governance by Vinaya.
C. Governance by Dhamma.

This is all it comes down to. If we were to discuss this point in detail, there would be much more to say.

Now, however, we will go on to discuss Part II.

II. THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

Education in Buddhism -- of the kind that gives knowledge conducive to the prosperity of the religion -- is of three sorts, as follows:

A. Sutamaya-panna: Discernment acquired through study.

People who are learned (//bahusuta//) -- who have studied and memorized a great deal -- fall into two groups. The first group contains those who have studied in line with the curriculum of the Department, i.e., the official textbooks known as 'Nak Dhamma' (literally, Dhamma expert) levels l, 2, and 3; or the Pali courses, levels 3-9. Whether or not one passes the examinations is not important. What is important is the knowledge gained. This sort of education gives rise to one level of understanding, termed //sutamaya-panna// -- discernment acquired through study.

The second group contains those who study on their own -- listening to sermons, reading textbooks, studying the Vinaya, Suttas, and Abhidhamma; discussing questions with one another (//dhamma-sakaccha//), which can lead to understanding on a higher level, so that one may apply one's knowledge to training oneself.

Both groups are classed as being on the elementary level of education in the study of Buddhism.

The study of memorized doctrine (//pariyatti dhamma//) is of three sorts --

I. Studying like a snake (//alagaddupama-pariyatti//): This refers to a person who has studied and is thoroughly knowledgeable, but who makes himself poisonous to others. The deadly venom of a monk is sensual defilement, which includes //raga// -- infatuation and delight in sensual objects; //dosa// -- irritation, displeasure, a strong mental poison that darkens the heart, annihilating whatever merit is there, destroying its own goodness. When this happens, the really deadly poisons appear: //kodha// -- anger; and //moha// -- delusion, confusion about one's own good and evil, seeing right as wrong and wrong as right, being unreasonable and misguided in one's views. All of this is classed as delusion, a poison buried deep in the heart.

Thus to gain an education without then conducting oneself in line with the Dhamma can be called studying like a snake. Such a person makes himself into a cobra's head, spreading his venom into anyone who comes near. To consort with such a person is to consort with a fool and can poison the mind, drawing it into evil and unskillful ways, such as searching for well-being with reference only to this lifetime, without looking for what is more worthwhile -- one's well-being in future lifetimes -- or for what is most worthwhile: the liberation of //nibbana//.

2. Studying for the sake of emancipation (//nissaranattha-pariyatti//): When we have studied the Dhamma and Vinaya and learned what is good and evil, right and wrong, skillful and unskillful, we shouldn't do whatever we see as wrong or harmful to ourselves and others. Instead, we should develop whatever is gracious and good, benefiting ourselves and others in any of the following three ways: Having learned the factors that promote well-being in the present life, we should give rise to them for ourselves and others. Having learned what is necessary to bring about our well-being in future lifetimes -- going to a good bourn or the heavenly realms in the next life -- we should conduct ourselves accordingly. As for the ultimate well-being -- //nibbana// -- when we have learned what sort of person it will appear in and how to behave so as to be worthy of it, we should then foster the qualities within ourselves necessary to bring it about.

The qualities leading to these sorts of benefits are four --

a. //Chanda//: a willingness and readiness to abandon all unskillful mental qualities. Whether or not we can actually abandon them in line with our intentions, we should always show a willingness to abandon them, to follow the practice and to develop our strength of character step by step. This is //chanda//, a factor that lures and propels us into making future progress.

b. //Viriya//: persistence in making the effort to relinquish the evil within ourselves; an unwillingness to lie wallowing in our evils; persistence in fostering virtue within ourselves, in maintaining and developing the virtues we already have, and in using them for the well-being of others. This is termed //viriyiddhipada// -- persistence as a factor leading to success.

c. //Citta//: Whatever task we undertake, we should be fully intent on it and not shirk our duties. We should try to develop our virtuous actions so that they reach the goal, the supreme well-being to which we all aspire. Whatever happiness is appropriate to us in this life, we should bring it about through our own intentness of purpose. Whatever happiness should arise in future lifetimes, we should set our hearts on striving to cultivate it. As for the happiness unrelated to worldly baits (//niramisa-sukha//), we should focus our whole attention on correctly developing the path to reach it. We will then be able to attain our goal without a doubt.

d. //Vimansa//: circumspection. The discernment gained from our studies should be put into practice in line with the factors of the Noble Path. Before doing anything in thought, word, or deed, we should first run things through carefully in the mind, from beginning to end, and only then go ahead and act. We should give rise to the mental virtue termed Right Concentration. Concentration gives rise to discernment, and when the discernment of liberating insight arises within us it leads to the happiness that lies beyond the world. To be circumspect and thoroughly aware that whatever will not be beneficial to ourselves or others should not be done, and that whatever will lead to our own well-being and that of others -- in this life, in the next, or in the ultimate sense -- should be fostered within ourselves through our own circumspection and discernment: This is //vimansiddhipada// -- circumspection as a factor leading to success.

When we do this, we will reap two sorts of results: //iddhiriddhi// -- the power that arises from being established in these four qualities; and //punnariddhi// -- the influence that arises from our own inner virtue. //Iddhiriddhi// is authority, //punnariddhi// is kindness. To have these two qualities is to be a person with two eyes, two ears, two nostrils, two arms, two legs -- //'puriso//,' a complete human being, who can help others become complete in their hearts as well.

This is what it means to be a person who studies for the sake of emancipation.

3. Studying to be a treasurer (//Bhandagarika-pariyatti//): This refers to the education of a person who has already finished the training -- i.e., an arahant, one who has gained release from all defilements. Why does such a person have to study? For the sake of the work of the religion, so as to be of assistance in helping Buddhism to prosper. When was it ever the case that a person had to be thoroughly acquainted with all aspects of formulated Dhamma and customs before doing away with defilement? Some people are born in lower-class families, others in upper-class families. Some have a great deal of social sophistication, others don't. Still they are able to free their minds from defilement by means of the practice, for in practice it isn't necessary to know a great deal of formulated Dhamma. Even a person who knows only a fair amount can still put an end to defilement. So when such a person sees that he can be of help to others, he must educate himself. His study is for the sake of gaining a sense of the differences in societies, in communities, and in types of individuals; to gain a sense of time and place; to know the varieties of beliefs and customs that people adhere to. When he becomes thoroughly and properly acquainted with all customs and conventions, he can then deal effectively with other people for their benefit. This is why he must study and take an interest in such things. Education of this sort is thus called studying to be a treasurer, and is an aspect of the Department of Education.

These, then, are the three forms of studying memorized Dhamma.

B. Cintamaya-panna:
Discernment acquired through reflection.

When we have studied -- in whichever way -- we mustn't stop there. We should take all the Dhamma we have learned and chew it over with our own discernment. To chew things over in this way -- thinking and evaluating -- may give rise to a flavor different from that of our previous education. We think things through on our own, instead of simply believing what other people say or what is written in books. We believe our own sense of reason, discovered within ourselves and termed '//paccattam//' -- individual and personal. This sort of education grows out of the earlier sort, in the same way that a person who has learned how to read the letters of the alphabet can then go on to use that knowledge to read textbooks and gain knowledge more valuable than the alphabet on its own.

To make a comparison with food, this second form of education has more flavor than the first. The first sort of education is like taking food, arranging it according to type -- main-course dishes in one group, desserts in another -- and then finding delight simply in seeing it arranged. The second form of education -- thinking, evaluating, reasoning things through -- is like taking the food and tasting it. The person who does this gets much more use out of the food than the person who simply sits and looks at it: He can nourish his body and know whether or not the food tastes good, whether it's sour or sweet, very sweet or just a little sweet -- all on his own. This is what it means to pursue this second form of education properly. To study in this way gives rise to the flavor of the Dhamma, which can then be used to nourish the heart. When the heart is fed on what is truly nourishing, it gains strength in the area of the Dhamma, termed --

1. //Saddha-bala//: conviction in the worth of inner virtue. Our conviction in the right actions we perform and in the results they will bring us becomes a dominant force in the heart.

2. //Viriya-bala//: The quality of perseverance becomes dominant. We become resolute and courageous in practicing what is good.

3. //Sati-bala//: Our powers of mindfulness become all-encompassing in the great frame of reference.

4. //Samadhi-bala//: The mind develops the steadiness and strength termed 'heightened consciousness' (//adhi-citta//), beyond the power of the Hindrances.

5. //Panna-bala//: Right Understanding, which comes from the sense of reason fostered in the heart through circumspection. Understanding is strength that can make the mind energetic, competent, and powerful.

Discernment acquired through reflection can give rise to the flavor of the Dhamma through the act of thinking, but for thought to be truly nourishing and energizing, we must go on to develop discernment through meditation so as to be complete in our practice.

C. Bhavanamaya-panna:
Discernment acquired through meditation.

//Coming to know ourselves//: We should study and investigate ourselves so as to gain knowledge exclusively within by centering the heart in concentration. To study ourselves by ourselves means to study by means of our own inner alphabet -- the various parts put together out of the four properties (//dhatu//) within the body; the five //khandhas//, and the six sense media (//ayatana//). To study on this level means to study with and within the mind, investigating the inner alphabet:

A = //Kesa//, the hair on the head.
B = //Loma//, the hair on the body.
C = //Nakha//, the nails that grow from the ends of the fingers and toes.
D = //Danta//, the teeth that grow in the mouth along the upper and lower jaws.
E = //Taco//, the skin that enwraps the various parts of the body.

All five are things that a contemplative should study. Usually, before we become ordained, we don't even know our own inner ABC's, much less how to spell. So our preceptors, out of concern for us as their sons in the monkhood, teach us these five things even before we become monks and novices. But if we neglect them after our ordination, it shows that we have no respect for education and no reverence for the teachings of the Lord Buddha. This is the cause for degeneracy in the Department of Education. To be able to read all 32 of the parts in one's body, and to teach others to do the same, is to qualify as a member of the Sangha, or as a true disciple of the Lord Buddha.

We should study all four or all six of the properties within us -- earth, water, wind, and fire -- as a basis for tranquillity meditation, giving rise to //jhana// by thinking about and evaluating the parts of the body until we gain an understanding of earth, water, wind, and fire, together with space and cognizance, the overseer of the house. Study the five //khandhas// -- body, feelings, labels, mental constructs, and cognizance. Keep careful restraint over the six sense media -- eye and visual objects, ear and sounds, nose and smells, tongue and tastes, body and tactile sensations, intellect and thoughts. The mind will then enter the first level of //jhana//, composed of thinking, evaluating, rapture, ease, and singleness of preoccupation. Such a person thus goes on to a higher level of education, comparable to high school or secondary education. When the heart becomes quiet, a cool and refreshing sense of pleasure called '//rasa//,' the flavor and nourishment of the Dhamma, will appear in it. //Attha//: We will realize the aims of the Dhamma and our own aspirations as well.

Studying on this level will give rise to a higher level of knowledge termed liberating insight (//Vipassana-nana//) -- clear comprehension in terms of the four Noble Truths -- enabling us to go beyond suffering and stress. This is termed the awareness of release. We will gain a special knowledge that is apart from all of the mundane things we may have learned: This is transcendent knowledge that, beginning with liberating insight, enables us to escape one after another the fortress walls of the citadel of Death.

The citadel of Death has ten walls --

1. Self-identification (//sakkaya-ditthi//): assuming the truth of our views; assuming that the body is our self or belongs to us.
2. Doubt (//vicikiccha//): uncertainty about the paths and fruitions leading to //nibbana//.
3. Attachment to precepts and practices (//silabbata-paramasa//): groping about, i.e., undependability in our behavior, which leads us to clutch at various beliefs, searching for absolute standards of good outside of the acts of our own heart and mind.
4. Sensual passion (//kama-raga//): desire caused by the power of defilement.
5. Irritation (//patigha//): annoyance coming from the mind's sense of being 'struck' or disturbed.
6. Passion for form (//rupa-raga//): attachment to certain kinds of physical phenomena.
7. Passion for formless phenomena (//arupa-raga//): attachment to mental phenomena, such as feelings of pleasure.
8. Conceit (//mana//): construing ourselves to be this or that.
9. Restlessness (//uddhacca//): distraction, the mind's tendency to get engrossed or carried away.

10. Unawareness (//avijja//): delusion; ignorance; being unacquainted with cause and effect, and out of touch with what is true.

All ten of these factors are walls in the citadel of Death. No one who lacks discernment will be able to destroy them, which is why the Buddha was especially insistent on this level of education, teaching his followers to study it from the very day of their ordination so that their education would be complete.

To summarize, there are three aspects to this third level of education --

1. Learning the alphabet: Studying in line with the labels we have for the various parts of the body, such as hair of the head, etc.

2. Learning to spell: Taking the consonants -- such as the four properties of earth, water, wind, and fire -- and then adding the vowels -- feelings, labels, mental constructs, and cognizance -- so that there is awareness of the six sense media, enabling us to know that there are good sights, good sounds, good smells, good tastes, good tactile sensations, and good ideas in the world, and that sometimes things that are not so good can also come in through the six sense media. The awareness that enters in and interacts in this way can be called //patisandhi-vinnana// -- cognizance connected with physical phenomena, interacting with physical phenomena, enabling us to know all levels of good and bad. When we are able to evaluate and choose what is good and bad within ourselves, we qualify as being able to 'read,',knowing thoroughly all the ways our inner alphabet works in practice.

3. Learning to make sense of it all: The word 'sense' (//attha//) here has two meanings:

a. Realizing the results our education is aimed at.

b. Comprehending all the various parts into which we are analyzed

-- the 32 parts of the body, the properties, the //khandhas//, and the six sense media -- or, what it all comes down to, the body and mind, plus the activity of thought, word, and deed. To put it briefly, all things are achieved through the heart.

//mano-pubbangama dhamma//:

The heart comes before all else. All things are excelled by the heart and made from the heart. A trained heart is the most superlative thing there is.

When we have tasted within ourselves the flavor and nourishment of all dhammas -- mundane and transcendent (the flavor of deathlessness, which surpasses all flavors of the world) -- then,

//kevala paripunnam parisuddham brahmacariyam//:

We have performed the entirety of the holy life. Our training in the holy life is perfect and pure.

This is what it means to graduate, to finish our higher education in the Buddha's teachings.

Whoever has duties in the area of education, then, should attend to them. Otherwise, Buddhism is sure to degenerate because of our own lack of education. If this happens, the Department of Education established by the Sangha authorities will be futile and worthless, due to our own misunderstanding of its meaning and aims.

This department is another important area, in that it works for the convenience of the Sangha through improving, repairing, and maintaining the physical surroundings in which we live. To be specific, its duties are to build and repair, inspect and maintain our dwellings or monasteries so that they will qualify as //senasana-sappaya// -- comfortable, amenable places for contemplatives to stay.

Meditating monks by and large tend to have fixed notions about this area, believing that to sponsor or do construction work for the sake of Buddhists at large is to devote oneself to merely material concerns, and that such work thus shouldn't be done. Some even believe that work of this sort closes off the paths and fruitions leading to //nibbana//. Nevertheless, these people have not gone beyond the material benefits they criticize. For this reason, we should examine the area of building and development to see whether or not it is appropriate and accords with the Vinaya.

I would like to divide the duties in this area into two sorts, in line with the two major duties of those who are ordained --

A. The duty of study (//gantha-dhura//): Those monks who are //gamavasi//, or village dwellers, are responsible for improving, repairing, and developing the places in which they live, for the sake of the common good of Buddhists at large. When building, they should have a sense of scale, order, and beauty so that their buildings will fit in with their physical surroundings. For example, monks' quarters, restrooms, meeting halls, and ordination halls should be arranged, in so far as possible, in an orderly way, in keeping with their functions. Once built, they should be kept clean and in repair so as to contribute to the beauty of their surroundings. If anything is lacking, and one is in a position to search for it by proper means, then obtain and maintain it in a righteous manner for the sake of one's own convenience and that of the group. All of these activities form a part of the duty of study: improving and developing the place in which we live.

B. The duty of meditation (//vipassana-dhura//): This refers to those monks termed //arannavasi//, or forest dwellers, who search for secluded areas appropriate for meditation, such as those mentioned in the Pali: under the shade of a tree; in a secluded dwelling; under a lean-to, far from settled areas; in a quiet tower; under an over-hanging rock; in a cave; in a forest; in a cemetery; or in a deserted building. One should learn how to select such a place and how to keep it clean and neat for the sake of one's convenience as a meditator while living there. This is 'building and development' in the forest: Observing one's duties in caring for one's dwelling, improving and maintaining order in one's surroundings, and improving oneself while living there. This is building and development on the external level, one sign of a person who knows how to maintain himself in physical seclusion.

As for internal building and development, one should build a shelter for the mind: //vihara-dhamma//, a home for the heart. One should foster //magga//, the path to one's home; and //phala//, the goodness that arises in the heart as a result. The shelter along the way is Right Concentration: the four levels of //jhana//. This is the true shelter for those who are ordained.

Once we have been ordained as contemplatives, we should realize that we come under this particular department and so should perform our duties properly. But by and large we don't understand the true aims of the various departments and so grope around in external matters, without building or developing any internal qualities that can give the heart shelter. When the heart has no internal quality as its shelter, it will go living outside, building and helping only other people. If the heart is entangled with external matters, then after death it will be reborn attached to physical objects and possessions. Those who are attached to their monasteries will be reborn there as guardian spirits. Those who are attached to their quarters, their ordination halls, their meeting halls, their bodies, will be reborn right there. This is called sensual clinging: Whatever object we cling to, there we will be reborn. For example, there is a story told in the Dhammapada Commentary of a monk who received a robe that gave him great satisfaction and of which he became very possessive. When he died he was reborn as a louse right there in the robe, all because he had no inner quality as a dwelling for the heart.

So for our building and development to go beyond physical objects, we should build and repair a shelter for the heart. Only then will we be qualified to take on external duties -- and in performing our duties, we should be careful not to let our inner home become overgrown with the weeds of defilement, or to let the termites of the Hindrances eat into it. Don't let vermin, lizards, or lice -- character flaws (//mala//) -- take up residence inside. Roof the home of the heart -- //jhana// -- with restraint of the senses so that the fires of passion, aversion, and delusion don't burn it down.

To purify the principles of our conduct (//sila//) is to clear and grade our property. To give rise to //jhana// is to build a home for ourselves. To develop discernment within the mind is to light our home. We will then be safe both while we stay and when we go. When we are able to do this, it will lead to the true prosperity of the religion.

This is what it means to observe our duties in the area of building and development.

IV. THE DEPARTMENT OF SPREADING THE DHAMMA

Ways of spreading the Dhamma fall into three categories:

A. The first category: Study (//pariyatti//)

This refers to the appointment of monks in the various divisions to teach and train the populace at large. In addition, the establishment of syllabi such as the Nak Dhamma courses, and the appointment of teachers to instruct in accordance with them, can also be classed as a means of spreading the Dhamma.

Spreading the Dhamma can give rise to many sorts of benefits -- welfare in this life, welfare in lives to come, and acquaintance with the ultimate welfare -- //nibbana//. These are the aims of spreading the Dhamma by means of the written and spoken word, which is one aspect of the good that Buddhism has to offer.

I. Here, for those of us who are interested in welfare with regard only to this life, I would like to point out the way, which has four factors --

a. Initiative (//utthana-sampada//): We should be persistent and diligent in our work and our duties, making our living by means that are moral and upright, in line with the principles of Right Action.

b. Maintenance (//arakkha-sampada//): We should take good care of the possessions we have earned, and take good care of ourselves -- which we have also worked hard to earn -- so as not to fall into ways that are evil or wrong.

c. Having admirable friends (//kalyana-mittata//): We should associate with good people and avoid associating with immoral people who would lead us astray and cause our possessions to be squandered away.

d. An appropriate life style (//samajivita//): We should spend our earnings wisely and provide for our needs in a proper way. We should avoid spending our earnings in wrong ways that would soil how we live.

These four principles form the way to well-being in this lifetime, but we shouldn't be short-sighted or unrealistic. The truth of the matter is that each and every human being born will have to die and be parted from the happiness found in this world.

2. This being the case, we must provide for our welfare in the lives to come. The way to happiness in the lives to come, as taught by the religion, is as follows --

a. Conviction (//saddha-sampada//): Our convictions should be well-founded and well-informed, firm in the belief that there is good and evil, that there is merit (//punna//) and that our actions bear fruit we will receive. We should then avoid doing evil, and cultivate goodness as far as we are able.

b. Virtue (//sila-sampada//): We should be true to our moral principles and train ourselves to be full-fledged human beings in thought, word, and deed. Whatever we do should be done with honesty and rectitude.

c. Generosity (//caga-sampada//): We should be mature in our generosity, making donations to others, for instance, as we are able. To be giving in this way, the Buddha teaches, is a Noble Treasure, bearing dividends both in this life and in lives to come. If we are not giving of our possessions, they will bear us fruit only in this lifetime. At death, they will vanish. We won't be able to transfer them for use in the next life, just as Thai currency can't be used outside the boundaries of our country. When a person travels abroad, he won't be able to use his native currency at all unless he is sensible enough to exchange his money beforehand and deposit it in an appropriate bank. Only then will it be of use to him when he goes abroad. In the same way, sensible people deposit their possessions in the bank called the field of merit (//punnakkheta//): When they sacrifice their wealth in this way, it becomes a Noble Treasure, bearing dividends on the road ahead. And this doesn't apply only to possessions: When a person crosses the border from one country into another, even his native language won't be of any use. The Buddha thus taught us a foreign language -- chanting and the meditative practice of developing good will and loving-kindness -- to serve us as language in the world to come.

d. Discernment (//panna-sampada//): We should be circumspect and judicious in all our actions. Otherwise, we will act under the influence of such forms of delusion as //chandagati// -- being prejudiced by affection, with no reasonable thought for right or wrong; //bhayagati// -- being prejudiced by fear, with no thought for what is reasonable; //dosagati// -- being prejudiced by anger and dislike, with no thought for right or wrong; and //mohagati// -- being prejudiced by delusion, mistaking right for wrong, and wrong for right. To act in any of these ways means that we have no discernment. For this reason, whatever we may do in the area of making merit, we should first weigh things carefully and properly before acting. Only then will we qualify as being mature in our discernment.

These four practices open the way to a good bourn in the next life, i.e., in heaven, but even then we will still have to go whirling along the cycle of death and rebirth.

3. If we have strong conviction, we will be able to develop ourselves so as to go beyond this to the level of the ultimate welfare (//paramattha//), attaining the levels of transcendent virtue. This sort of virtue is something that all Buddhists should aim for. The prerequisites are two:

//conviction and perseverance//.

When we possess these qualities, they will serve as our tools -- regardless of whether we are sharp-witted or dull, men or women, people with many defilements or with only a few. Once we have set our sights, we should then develop two practices that form the path to //nibbana// --

a. tranquillity meditation: developing stillness in the mind;

b. insight meditation: developing discernment in the mind; gaining internal insight, seeing through to the natural condition of the Dhamma that lies within us.

The natural condition of the Dhamma is this: birth, momentary existence, disbanding -- like a wave on the sea. When the wind blows, great waves rise on the ocean. The same holds true with human life: The natural condition of the //khandhas// within us behaves like a wave. This is called the natural condition of the Dhamma.

Another condition, though, stays as it is, whether or not there are waves -- just as the water of the sea, when there is no wind, is smooth, level, and clear. This natural condition in the heart -- a condition that does not take birth, does not change, is not annihilated, and does not die, but simply stays as it is -- lies within each and every one of us.

These two practices -- tranquillity and insight meditation -- lead to the ultimate welfare, //nibbana//. The two natural conditions lie within each of us. Those who know how to spread the Dhamma into themselves, teaching and counseling themselves, will attain well-being without a doubt.

B. The second category: Practice (//patipatti//)

Spreading the Dhamma by practicing it, without having to use words, simply behaving well so as to be an example to others through one's behavior: This is an important factor in spreading the Dhamma. Our Lord Buddha, for example, was once staying in a forest with a following of 500 monks. As twilight fell, he rested, inclining on his right side, while the monks all did walking or sitting meditation. No one was talking. Everything was perfectly still. Just then, a group of wandering ascetics came into the forest and, seeing this, were completely won over. They felt so inspired by the virtues of the Buddha, Dhamma, and Sangha that they were willing to become disciples. Later, they were of great help in spreading the religion. This shows that good and proper practice is an extremely important force in spreading the Dhamma.

Not only human beings, but even animals are able to follow the example of others' behavior, as when a man with a crippled leg leads a horse with sound legs around on a tether: In no time at all, the horse will learn to walk with a limp. As the leader goes, so go his followers; as the mould is shaped, so are the items moulded. Good behavior is thus a way of spreading the religion that has a deep and telling influence on the hearts of those who come after. This is one of our true duties within the religion. Even if our defilements may be heavy and thick, we can still be of service to others in this way.

Thus in spreading the Buddha's teachings, it's not enough simply to get up and deliver a sermon. A person with discretion in teaching the Dhamma can convince others of its value in a variety of ways: by his manners, as already mentioned; or by //adesana-patihariya// -- the marvel of knowing another person's thoughts; or by //anusasani-patihariya// -- the marvel of teaching that, when put into practice, gives the promised results. All of these are means of spreading the Buddha's teachings.

C. The third category: Psychic Marvels (//iddhi-patihariya//)

In some areas of religious work, spreading the Dhamma is done via the mind -- as, for example, when the Venerable Culapanthaka performed a psychic marvel that astounded those who saw, inspiring conviction, reverence, and awe in their hearts. Those who had never before felt inspired by the Buddha's teachings suddenly became inspired because of those events.

Other instances were performed by the Buddha himself, as when he went to break the pride of the three Kassapa brothers. He went out in the rain without getting wet, did walking meditation in the flood without getting wet, which led the elder Kassapa to abandon his stiff-necked pride -- and when he had abandoned his pride, the Buddha was able to teach him the Dhamma. Kassapa and his followers saw the Dhamma appear within themselves, experienced the paths, fruitions, and //nibbana//, and proclaimed themselves followers of the Buddha. They were then of great help in spreading the religion.

Another example is when the Buddha subdued the bandit, Angulimala. As Angulimala ran chasing after him, the Buddha radiated good will through the power of //jhana//, causing the earth between them to rise and fall in great waves until Angulimala, tired from his running, called out in surrender. The Buddha then instructed him to the point where he was so impressed and convinced that he was eventually able to make his heart attain the Dhamma.

There are many other examples of this sort by which the Buddha was able to proclaim the religion so that it has lasted into the present day. If we take spreading the Dhamma to be simply a matter of words, it wouldn't have been -- and won't be -- enough.

Thus, spreading the Dhamma is done in three ways:

A. By deed -- showing others the Dhamma through the example of one's behavior; being correct and gracious in one's words and deeds; keeping restraint over one's senses of sight, hearing, smell, taste, feeling, and ideation so as to be an inspiring example to those who see.

B. By word -- teaching and explaining the Dhamma out loud, giving rise to understanding and inspiration in those who hear.

C. By thought (psychic feats, //manomayiddhi//). When one has seen with the power of intuitive understanding that a person is ready to receive the Dhamma, one should spread thoughts of good will, dedicating the fruits of one's merit to that person. This way of spreading the Dhamma can be done both in public and in private, with those who are near and those who are far away. It can help certain human and divine beings, and inspire conviction in those whose dispositions lie within the net of the Dhamma, all without having to say a word.

This has been termed 'anointing with the waters of benevolence.'

The good will that lies in the heart is like a cooling current. Wherever this current is directed through the power of a radiant heart, it can draw other beings, both human and divine, to become inspired to develop the qualities of their hearts in line with their varying dispositions. Even if we have yet to meet them, and have simply heard news, we can still cause their hearts to become cool and refreshed, contributing to their welfare and happiness. Spreading the Dhamma in this way is beneficial both to us and to others. To be able to do this, though, we must first give rise to sufficient quality in our own hearts. If the quality isn't yet there, then build it and dedicate it first of all to those to whom you owe 'kamma debts.' Spread this goodness to fill the body. Spread this goodness to fill the mind. This sense of fullness is what is meant by rapture (//piti//) -- i.e., full of what is skillful. Goodness fills the heart, refreshing it with what is skillful. When goodness fills the body and mind, it is like water filling a tank or saturating the earth. Wherever the earth is saturated with water, there the trees and vegetation flourish. But if we don't have enough goodness within, we're like a tank without any water: No matter how far the faucet is opened, only wind will come out. The coolness of wind and the coolness of water are two very different things. The coolness of wind can cause trees to wither and can send dust clouds flying, but the coolness of water is useful in many ways: It can be used to wash clothes, to bathe the body, to drink, or to sprinkle on the ground, nourishing plants and softening the earth. Not only that, it can also give a deep sense of refreshment. In the same way, people who practice the Dhamma, even if they don't speak a word but simply spread thoughts of good will, can be of great benefit to people at large. This is termed '//metta-parami//' -- the perfection of benevolence.

So when goodness arises within us, we can work for the welfare of others even when we sit with our eyes closed, perfectly still. But it's the nature of ignorant people to believe that such a person is simply saving his own skin. They haven't looked deep inside.

The teachers of the past thus made a comparison with thunder and rain. Some people can teach others, but they themselves have no inner goodness. Such people are called //thunder without rain//. They can cause others to feel awe and respect, but can give no sense of cooling refreshment. Some people are like //rain without thunder//. They rarely speak, but spread thoughts of good will, dedicating their merit to others. They have received their own full measure of inner goodness and so can give goodness and inspire conviction in the hearts of others even when simply sitting still. Those who find peace and calm in the shelter of such an influence will, in turn, feel the highest form of respect. Some people are like //rain with thunder//, and others, //rain with thunder and wind to boot//: This, for those who are able, is the best of all. Such people, after having developed their own inner goodness, are able to teach others, spreading the Dhamma by thought, word, and deed, giving results in many ways: People who are stubborn and fixed in their opinions will be able to soften in an instant, just as giant trees bend before the wind. At the same time, teachers of this sort can be an example to others through their behavior and the kindness of their hearts, feeling no envy for the goodness of others, but only compassion, providing the shelter of mental peace to all sorts of people. This is the way to spread the Dhamma fully and completely, causing the religion to prosper in the true and proper way.

The field of spreading the Dhamma is extremely important. Those who practice it will get results in two ways:

1. By knowing how to use authority -- the power of the mind -- so as to be of benefit.

2. By knowing how to use compassion -- the goodness of the heart -- so as to benefit their fellow human beings, with no need for power of any sort whatsoever.

Only those who can act in this manner are qualified for the Department of Spreading the Dhamma.

When the duties of all these departments are fully observed by a community, a group, or an individual, they will help the religion to prosper and thrive. But as long as we are unable to fulfill these duties, the establishment of directives for each of the various departments is meaningless and can lead, I'm afraid, only to the disappearance of the Buddha's teachings, as happened in India. This is why I have asked to explain our organization and duties so that we will all be thoroughly acquainted with them.

It will be ideal if each individual can observe the duties of all four departments; and, to be true to the Dhamma, each of us should regard all of these duties as his own personal responsibility. If we pay attention only to the directives and rules, we will be deficient in our duties, and the establishment of the various departments will be a waste of time. All the thought and consideration devoted to our welfare will be fruitless .

Thus we should use our authority and inner virtues in observing our duties firmly and properly for the sake of the good order of the religion.

If I were to explain things at length, there would be much more to say; but I will stop for the time being with this condensed discussion of the main points at issue, which should be enough to serve us as an adequate guide.

If there is anything in any way wrong or defective in what I have written here, I ask the reader's forgiveness.

Peace.

GLOSSARY

APALOKANA-KAMMA: A procedure to use in conducting communal business of the Sangha, in which certain non-controversial issues are settled simply with an informal announcement. The following terms -- natti-kamma, natti-dutiya-kamma, and natti-catuttha-kamma -- refer to procedures where the issue must be settled by a formal motion stated once, twice, or four times, giving all the monks present the opportunity to object to the motion before it is carried.

ATTHA: Meaning, sense, aim, result.

AVIJJA; Unawareness; counterfeit knowledge.

AYATANA: Sense medium. The six inner sense media are the eye, ear, nose, tongue, body and intellect. The six outer sense media are their respective objects.

BHAGAVANT: An epithet for the Buddha, commonly translated as 'Blessed One' or 'Exalted One.' Some commentators, though, have traced the word etymologically to the Pali root meaning 'to divide' and, by extension, 'to analyze', and so translate it as 'Analyst'.

DHAMMA: Event; phenomenon; the way things are in and of themselves; their inherent qualities; the basic principles underlying their behavior. Also, principles of behavior that human beings should follow so as to fit in with the right natural order of things; qualities of mind they should develop so as to realize the inherent quality of the mind in and of itself. By extension, 'dhamma' is used also to refer to any doctrine that teaches such things. Thus the Dhamma of the Buddha refers both to his teachings and to the direct experience of the quality of nibbana at which those teachings are aimed.

DHATU: Element; property; the elementary properties that make up the inner sense of the body and mind: earth (solidity), water (liquidity), fire (heat), wind (energy or motion), space and cognizance.

JHANA: Meditative absorption in a single object, notion or sensation.

KAMMA: Acts of intention that result in states of being and birth. 'Kamma debts' are the moral debts one has to others either through having been a burden to them (the primary example being one's debt to one's parents) or from having wronged them.

KHANDHA: Component parts of sensory perception: rupa (sense data, appearances); vedana (feelings of pleasure, pain or indifference); sanna (labels, concepts, allusions); sankhara (mental constructs or fabrications); and vinnana (cognizance, the act of attention that 'spotlights' objects so as to know them distinctly and pass judgment on them).

MAGGA: The path to the cessation of suffering and stress. The four transcendent paths -- or rather, one path with four levels of refinement -- are the path to stream entry (entering the stream to nibbana, which ensures that one will be reborn at most only seven more times), the path to once-returning, the path to non-returning and the path to arahantship. Phala -- fruition -- refers to the mental state immediately following the attainment of any of these paths.

MALA: Stains on the character, traditionally listed as nine: anger, hypocrisy, envy, stinginess, deceit, treachery, lying, evil desires and wrong views.

NIBBANA (NIRVANA): Liberation; the unbinding of the mind from greed, anger and delusion, from physical sensations and mental acts. As this term is used to refer also to the extinguishing of fire, it carries connotations of stilling, cooling and peace. (According to the physics taught at the time of the Buddha, the property of fire exists in a latent state to a greater or lesser degree in all objects. When activated, it clings and is bound to its fuel. As long as it remains latent or is extinguished, it is 'unbound'.)

PATIMOKKHA: The basic monastic code, composed of 227 training rules.

PUNNA: Inner worth; merit; the inner sense of well-being that comes from having acted rightly or well, and that enables one to continue acting well.

PUNNAKKHETTA: Field of merit -- an epithet for the Sangha.

SANGHA: The community of the Buddha's disciples. On the ideal level, this refers to all those, whether lay or ordained, who have reached at least the path to stream entry (see magga). On the conventional level, it refers to the Buddhist monkhood. In Thai, it also refers to the central administration of the Thai monkhood and to any individual monk. Traditionally, Sangha does NOT refer to all Buddhists. The traditional term for the entire "assembly" of the Buddha's followers -- ordained or not, awakened or not -- is buddha-parisa. The reason for this distinction is that Sangha is one of a Buddhist's three refuges, and not all members of the buddha-parisa can be taken as refuge.

SANKHARA: Fashioning -- the forces that fashion things, the process of fashioning, and the fashioned things -- mental or physical -- that result. In some contexts this term refers specifically to the fashioning of thoughts in the mind. In others, it refers to all five khandhas (see above).

VINAYA: The monastic discipline. The Buddha's own name for the religion he founded was 'this Dhamma-Vinaya,' this doctrine and discipline.

Introduction

In discussing the spiritual needs of the dying from the Buddhist perspective, we firstly need to look at several key points, namely:

gaining an understanding of the shortness and preciousness of life.
considering what can help ourselves and others at the same time of death.
considering what goes on after death.
the Buddhist concept of mind.

Reflections On Death

In order to gain an understanding of the shortness and preciousness of life and how to make it meaningful we need to reflect on the fact that death is certain and that the time of death is uncertain. These points may seem obvious but we rarely stop to consider the truth of them. For example, when we consider that death is certain we can reflect on several points:

1) there is no possible way to escape death (nobody ever has),
2) life has a definite, inflexible limit and each moment brings us closer to the end of this life, and

3) death comes in a moment and it's time is unexpected (and even while alive we devote very little of our life to spiritual practice).

When reflecting on the fact that the time of death in uncertain we can analyse this further by recognising that:

1) the duration of our lifespan is uncertain - young people can die before old people, the healthy before the sick, etc.

2) there are many causes and circumstances that lead to death but few that favour the sustenance of life - in fact even the things that sustain life and make it comfortable can kill us e.g. food, our house, our car.

3) the weakness and fragility of our body contributes to life's uncertainty - our body can be easily destroyed by disease or accident.

Reflecting on these points can help us to realise that life is short and precious and that there is no time to lose. It is good to remind ourselves of these points each day. It can be very helpful when first getting up each day to say to ourselves "today may be the last day of my life, let me live it therefore by making it as meaningful as possible, being of benefit to others, etc.".

It can also be very helpful to consider how we would react if we were told, for example, that we only had 3 or 6 months to live, to ask ourselves questions like:
am I ready to die?
what unfinished business do I have?
what do I want to do or achieve in the time I have left?
will my priorities change?
what can help me at the time of death?
or as somebody put it "Live each day as though it were your last and one day you'll be right!"

The other critical point is to consider what will help us at the time of death. Reflection here reveals that:

1) worldly possessions such as wealth, position or money can't help us

2) relatives and friends can neither prevent death nor go with us

3) even our own precious body is of no help to us and we have to leave it behind.

So ultimately the only thing that can help us is the state of our mind, the state of our mental or spiritual development.

Karma and the mind

How is this so? The Buddhist belief is that every action of body, speech and mind that we create lays down a subtle imprint in our mind which has the potential to ripen as future happiness or suffering, depending on whether the action was positive or negative. These imprints remain in the mind until they ripen or until they are purified or cleansed by spiritual practices. This process in known as the law of karma.

The mind itself is formless, shapeless, colourless, genderless, and has the ability to know or cognize all phenomena. It's basic nature is luminous and knowing. The mind also has different levels - gross, subtle, and very subtle. The very subtle mind is very clear and is usually only experienced at the time of death or during advanced meditation practices. The imprints of our actions (karmic imprints) are stored in the very subtle mind.

Death, intermediate state and rebirth

At the time of death, the body and mind go through a process of dissolution, where the 25 psycho-physical constituents that we are comprised of gradually absorb and lose their ability to function.1 This process of dissolution is associated with external and internal signs. This process continues even after the breathing ceases, for up to 3 days.

During this process the mind becomes more and more subtle and clear until it eventually reaches the point of the 'clear light of death', where it is said to be approximately 9 times more clear than in the normal waking state. At this point the mind separates from the body, taking with it all of the subtle imprints from that life and previous ones.

This very subtle mind or consciousness and the very subtle wind upon which it rides then arises into an intermediate state (bardo) being which has a subtle (non-physical) body that can move through solid objects, travel anywhere just by thinking of that place, and so on. The intermediate state being stays in that state for up to 7 weeks, by which time a suitable place of rebirth is usually found. This place of rebirth is determined by the force of karma, whereby the intermediate state being dies and the consciousness is propelled without control towards the place of rebirth. The consciousness enters the fertilized egg at or near the moment of conception and the new life begins.

Crucial in this whole process is the state of mind at the time of death, because it is this that determines the situation a person will be reborn into. If the mind is calm and peaceful and imbued with positive thoughts at the time of death, this will augur well for a happy rebirth. However, if the mind is in a state of anger or has strong desire or is fearful etc, this will predispose to an unhappy or lower type of rebirth.

The mind that arises at the time of death is usually the one that the person is most habituated to. People tend to die in character, although this is not always so. So in the Buddhist tradition it is emphasised strongly that the time to prepare for death is now, because if we develop and gain control over our mind now and create many positive causes we will have a calm and controlled mind at the time of death and be free of fear. In effect, our whole life is a preparation for death and it is said that the mark of a spiritual practitioner is to have no regrets at the time of death. As a friend of mine said recently on hearing about these concepts, "Perhaps it's time I started swotting for the finals!"

The spiritual needs of the dying

When considering the spiritual needs of the dying, the basic principle is to do whatever you can do to help the person die with a calm and peaceful mind, with spiritual/positive thoughts uppermost. This is because it is believed that the state of mind at the time of death is vitally important and plays an important role in determining what will happen to the person after death.

So whether we are a doctor or nurse relieving pain and other distressing symptoms and reassuring the family, a counsellor helping to resolve emotional issues, a minister of religion offering spiritual counsel, or a volunteer who offers companionship and support for the dying person and their loved ones, we are all contributing significantly towards obtaining this calm and peaceful state of mind.

Within this basic principle, there are several ways we can categorise people which will help to determine the type of spiritual support that they need, namely:

Is the person conscious or unconscious?

- if conscious, you can do the practices with them or get them to do them
- if unconscious, you have to do the practices for them

Does the person have specific religious beliefs or not?

- if religious, remind them of their religious practices
- if not religious, encourage them to have positive thoughts, or remind them of positive things they have done

For a person with a spiritual faith it is beneficial to have spiritual objects around them e.g. an altar, a rosary, photos of their spiritual teacher, or to play spiritual music, or to burn incense, and so on - whatever reminds them of their spiritual practice. It is good also to talk to them about their spiritual practices, recite prayers with them and so forth. For an unconscious person it is said to be good to recite prayers, mantras etc into their ear.

If a person does not have a spiritual faith, it is helpful to remind them of positive things they have done in their life, or of positive qualities such as love and compassion and kindness.

It is important to avoid religious activities that are inappropriate or unwanted by the dying person. Someone standing at the end of the bed reciting prayers may be an annoyance, and I have seen a case of an attempted deathbed salvation which greatly angered the dying person.

The basic aim is to avoid any objects or people that generate strong attachment or anger in the mind of the dying person. From the spiritual viewpoint it is desirable to avoid loud shows of emotion in the presence of the dying person. We have to remind ourselves that the dying process is of great spiritual importance and we don't want to disturb the mind of the dying person, which is in an increasingly clear and subtle state. We have to do whatever we can to allow the person to die in a calm/happy/peaceful state of mind.

Meditations for sick and dying people

For those who have advanced illness but are still conscious there are a number of simple meditation techniques or visualisations that can be very helpful.

For those who are anxious or fearful of dying, teaching them relaxation or guiding them through a simple relaxation technique can be very beneficial. I will usually leave them a relaxation tape that they can use any time of day or night, whenever the need arises. When appropriate, touch, massage, reflexology and similar techniques can also be very soothing and stress-relieving, especially as the person may be somewhat starved of touch due to the fears and awkwardness of people who visit them.

A simple meditation technique that is very effective is awareness of the breath. The person becomes aware of the movement of the breath inwards and outwards at the level of the nostrils, breathing naturally and easily, not forcing or exaggerating the breath. At the same time, any thoughts that arise are let go of, constantly bringing the mind back to the breath. This technique, although simple, can generate very calm states of mind and relieve anxiety.

When the awareness of breath is then combined with the recitation of certain words or mantras or prayer it becomes very powerful. Just to say "Let...go...let...go..." in time with the in and out breaths can be soothing and relaxing. A person with a spiritual belief can use a prayer or mantra with the breath. For example, one lady whom I was visiting who was an ex-Catholic nun chose the prayer "not mine, Lord, but thy will be done". She shortened this by reciting "Not my will" on the in-breath and "but yours" on the out-breath, repeating this over and over again.

The beauty of this technique is that 1) it can be done for short periods of time and requires little concentration, which is often reduced by the effects of disease and medication, 2) it helps to calm the mind and reduce anxiety, 3) it utilizes and strengthens the person's spiritual refuge, 4) it does not require anything other than the breath.

For both a religious and a non-religious person a white light 'healing' meditation can bring a lot of comfort and benefit. The person visualizes a brilliant ball of white light above their head, with the light streaming down through their bodies, removing sickness, pain, fear, anxiety and filling the body with blissful healing light energy. Depending on the person's belief system, they can see the light as being in the nature of Jesus, or Buddha or some other spiritual figure, or they can just visualise it as a source of universal healing energy. This meditation combines very well with the breath awareness technique and is also good to have on tape to leave with the person, to be used whenever needed day or night. When a person is close to death they can also be encouraged to let go into the light, into the heart of Jesus or Buddha seated above their head, whatever is appropriate for that person.

The use of guided imagery or gentle music can also be soothing and relaxing and help the person to have a calm and peaceful mind as they approach death.

A person in pain can also be guided through a pain meditation, a technique whereby the pain is explored in detail, often leading to a reduction or eradication of the pain.2A very profound meditative technique is to actually use the illness or pain as a way of developing compassion. For those who can use this technique the results can be very great. The person is encouraged to think that "by me experiencing this cancer/AIDS/pain etc, may all other beings in the world be free of this, and may they have good health, happiness and long life". The person uses their sickness or pain as a way of opening their heart to others who are in a similar situation. People who have used this technique have often gone from being totally caught up in their own misery to a state of open-heartedness and peace.

An even more advanced technique is the meditation on "taking and giving on the breath" as described in the Tibetan Buddhist scriptures. In this meditation, one visualises taking on the suffering of all other living beings (or this could be restricted to those with cancer or AIDS etc) in the form of black smoke, which is taken in on the in-breath. Then on the out-breath all of our health and happiness and all positive qualities are sent out to other living beings in the form of white light, and we visualise them receiving everything that they want. At our heart we visualise a black rock of selfishness, and as the black smoke is inhaled we visualise it hitting the black rock and smashing it completely, thus eradicating all trace of selfishness from our minds.

This meditation is a profound method for developing compassion quickly but there will only be a minority of patients who will be able to use this method. The usual way to progress in these meditations is to start with small problems such as a headache or tiredness etc, then gradually train our minds to transform bigger and bigger problems.

Conclusion

The aim of all these methods is to help the dying person die with a calm, happy and positive mind. Anything that we can do to achieve this will benefit the person, whether that be good nursing care and pain relief, massage, the presence of a loving family, or whatever. It is said that the best thing we can bring to a dying person is our own quiet and peaceful mind.

In this way we will help the dying person make the transition from this life to the next as smooth and as meaningful as possible, recognising the vital spiritual importance of this transition.

My wish is that this short paper may in some way be of benefit to those who read it and reflect on it, and hence to the sick or suffering people that you serve.

The following piece is a composite of two interviews with Surya Das, one conducted by Fred von Allmen (copyright 1989), and one by Wes Nisker with Catherine Ingram. Additional portions of the interviews also appear in the Fall 1992 issue of Inquiring Mind. This piece was provided to Mt. Kailas BBS by Ann Parker, Boston area coordinator of The Dzogchen Foundation.

Q: We would like to talk about your practice in the Tibetan tradition of Dzogchen or the Great Practice.

Surya Das: Dzogchen basically deals with the innate intelligence or intrinsic awareness which all beings possess. It means seeing non-dualistically rather than in the usual dualistic object-subject dichotomy. By definition, delusion is dualistic, while non-duality is ultimate wisdom. Dzogchen doesn't necessarily have anything to do with Buddhism. It is the and perfect nature of all things.

Q: It is said that in Dzogchen "the view" is of ultimate importance. Explain what is meant by view.

Surya Das: In Dzogchen the view comes first, and is crucial. The view is the outlook that everything is primordially pure and perfect just as it is. One might also say that the view is like vast space, without center or periphery, infinite and open. It's the big view, the overview of overviews. We call it the view from above. Dzogchen is like swooping down from above. The Dalai Lama once said that Dzogchen is the practice of Buddhas, not the practice of beings.

Q: How does Dzogchen enable people to recognize their true nature?

SD: It is said that a practice like Dzogchen depends upon someone being "introduced" to the ultimate nature. The word "ngotrod" in Tibetan means "to be introduced" but it also means "to identify". So introduction doesn't just mean somebody tells you about it; it means you've recognized it yourself. You've seen the sun break through the clouds, for a moment at least. The clouds might obscure the sun again, just as the mind obscures the innate awareness, but the important point is that we have recognized the ultimate nature with certainty; we have actually come to see how things are.

Q: And this practice of Dzogchen is for Buddhas, not for ordinary beings?

SD: Remember we are all Buddhas. There is a great story about a cook in Adzum Trungpa's tent camp. Adzum Trungpa was a great master, and one day his cook, who was unlettered and untrained, burned his hand in the fire and "woke up". He came running to the master and told him what he had realized. Everything fell apart in that moment of burning his hand; he had a total satori breakthrough and non-dual experience. He realized who he was and the nature of all things. The master said, "That's it!" And the cook said, "Now what?" And the master said, "Keep cooking."

That cook became a great yogi, and he just kept cooking. But he had that big view, which is not intellectual. it's not a philosophical view. It's your intuitive highest wisdom. It's your gestalt, your overview, which is prethought, really. It's how you see the world.

Q: So Dzogchen has nothing to do with knowledge or sophistication, or with this or that school or tradition?

SD: That's right. If you want to entitle this interview "We are all Buddhas" I think it might be appropriate, because Dzogchen is beyond "isms" and "schisms." It's beyond Buddhism. We're all Buddhas, some asleep and some awakened. A sleeping Buddha and an awakened Buddha are both Buddhas by nature. And our only task is to awaken to our true nature. That's Dzogchen teaching, in my own words.

Mãdhya-mika, da Guhyasamãja, da Kãlachakra, dos Tantras Mães como o Chakrasamvara interpretação elucidativa de Do-drup-chen. Contudo, também é importante encontrar e con experimentado. O fundamento para a minha explicação advém dos ensinamentos do erudi qualificado da Nying-ma, Do-drup-chen Jik-may-den-bay-nyi-ma. Esse ser venerável foi dis Jam-yang-kyen-dzay-wang-bo ('Jam-dbyangs-khyen-brtse-dbang pó, 1820-1892), que, por encarnação do rei Tri-song-day-dzen (Khri-srong-lde-brtsan), e também um notável lama, li relacionados aos pontos de vista da Nying-ma, Sa-gya, Ga-gyu e Ge-luk. Nos últimos anos Do-drup-chen já era versado em muitos textos da escola Madhyamika, da Perfeição da Sab Válida e das interpretações do Kãlachakra Tantra e do Guhyasamãja Tantra realizadas pela Tradução, bem como da Grande Perfeição - sua especialidade.

Eu havia percebido anteriormente na explicação de Dzong-ka-ba a respeito do significado c quarenta sílabas da introdução ao Guhyasamãja Tantra, uma citação do The Five Stages (A Panchakrama, Rim pa Inga): "Tudo é como a estabilização meditativa da ilusão". Ao fazer Dzong-ka-ba estabelece que tudo quanto nos rodeia e todos os seres são o "passatempo" energia) e da mente. Enquanto lia Do-drup-ch ele estivesse afagando minha cabeça em sinal de assentimento, transmitindo-me a confian intuitiva tinha fundamento. Contudo, não posso reivindicar um conhecimento definitivo; est avaliação de como deve ser. É preciso que nos tornemos versados na escola Madhya-mik e no Kalachakra Tantra, e examinemos o General Meaning of the "Secret Essence Tantra" "Tantra da essência secreta") de Do-drup-chen.

É claro que a argumentação dos Epistemologistas (Prãmãnika)35 e dos Proponentes do Ca (Mãdhyamika) não é suficiente para explicar a metodologia do procedimento dos altos níve Mantra Secreto, tanto nas Antigas como nas Novas Escolas de Tradução. If nothing else, he has taught for many years and remained free of scandal, something that a explicitly stated that he is not a dharma heir of his teacher, Yasutani Roshi, and did not rece roshi from him or anyone else.13 Essentially, he took the title himself. This is not to say he is any more or less qualified than anyone else. Interestingly, Mr. Kapleau has " transmitted " to disciples. This is essentially a line beginning with himself, contrary to all other Zen lines, whi rhetorically maintain the myth of an unbroken lineage dating back to Shakyamuni Buddha.14

"In Korean Zen, the equivalent of roshi/Zen master, the pangjang, is surprisingly an elected be enough to have a recall vote... A monk's affinities are more with his fellow meditation mon specific master".15 This is extremely different from the Japanese model which is commonly to be the only authentic form.

The term "monk" is another word that calls for some scrutiny. The Chinese term means "left applied exclusively to individuals who have left their families and follow the rules for monks, celibacy among other requirements. The Japanese use the same word (obosan) for both "m permit marriage as do some Korean sects.16 In America when used by Zen people who are originating in Japan, the term "monk" has no well-defined meaning. Celibacy is seldom impli usage of the term. A man who calls himself a monk may be married, may live with someone similar situation prevails for nuns. It may even be the case that a "monk" may date a "nun." S refer to themselves as a monk or a nun may in fact be celibate, but they would be a minority Zen world. Nor do American Zen monks appear to follow the other requirements of rules for avoiding entertainment, liquor, and socializing with members of the opposite sex. One Amer gone so far as to institute a new ritual, "spiritual union," to recognize and legitimize a sexual between members who otherwise view themselves as a celibate monk and a nun.17

The idealization inherent in the terms "dharma transmission," "roshi" and "monk," has contrib problems we have experienced in American Zen. By the very nature of the roles the student titles, he routinely gives trust to the teacher that he would not give to anyone else. This trust quite complete and natural, because the wearing of the robes traditionally signifies the turnin selfish motivations, the vow to save all sentient beings and not to inflict harm. To an observe with this type of religious practice, the extent to which a student surrenders can appear asto people accept this kind of trust in spiritual practice, but it leads to problems when the teache emotionally mature or disciplined enough to assume the responsibility for guiding students. T may have some level of attainment, it is too often far from the idealized view of the student c promoted by the Zen institutions. "In the Ch'an tradition, the rhetoric maintains that each tran perfect, each successor is the spiritual equivalent of his predecessor... the primary feature is participatory nature; to receive certification of enlightenment from a Ch'an/Zen master is to jo succession of patriarchs and enter into dynamic communion with the sages of ancient times within the lineage of enlightened masters or not; there is no in-between category i.e. 'almost 'rather like a master'".18

In Zen, one can identify a two-fold process, looking-in and looking-out. Looking-in includes th meditation; looking-out includes taking the teacher as a model for living and as an inspiration As is common in Gnostic-type religious practice, the teacher in Zen is the final arbiter of real does the teacher judge the student's level of insight/wisdom, but, for closer students at the le often comment and judge on every aspect of the disciple's daily life. However, as we have s a serious disparity between the student ' s view of the teacher and the teacher's actual life. T don't hold the teacher to any standard of conduct not merely because they feel they themsel authority to make such judgments about the teacher. They also fear that criticisms which un teacher's authority would cast doubts on the value of their years of practice under that teach also come to feel protective of immature Zen institutions in the United States, and hesitate to the damage that public scandal could cause. Others fear their own rise to a position of teach jeopardized.

As noted earlier, while D. T. Suzuki and others have led people to believe that there was no morality, a different picture emerges if we look at the historical beginnings of Zen. In China, began, Zen monasteries became distinct from other Buddhist monasteries with the famous (749-814) who supposedly prescribed a strict code of behavior for members of the monastic penalties for improper behavior. All of the classical accounts of Pai-chang's founding of an in system of Ch'an monastic training, it turns out, may be traced back to a single source, "Regu Ch'an Approach" (Ch'an-men Kuei-shih) written in approximately 960 A.D.19 According to th offender had committed a serious offense he was beaten with his own staff. His robe and bo implements were burned in front of the assembled community, and he was [thereby] expelle Buddhist monks]. He was then thrown out [of the monastery] through a side gate as a sign o rules applied to everyone. P'ai-chang further recommended that "a spiritually perceptive and praiseworthy person was to be named as abbot." This definitely implies a moral and social a life. This is the logic of Zen from its earliest formulation as a distinct Buddhist sect.

If students have offered excessive power to teachers, that does not tell us why so many Zen taken advantage of the opportunity to abuse their power. Not all of them have, after all. The which does not often get asked in America Zen circles, what is the connection between attai What are we to make of the evident disparity in someone with institutional sanction, i.e. dhar supposedly having deep insight but behaving irresponsibly? It is difficult to understand why t exalted titles and long years of meditation practice behave in such selfish, self-serving, dishe destructive ways? The Platform Sutra itself states that, "If we do not put it (wisdom) into prac amounts to an illusion and a phantom."20 One partial explanation could be that of Chih-i (53 of T'ien-t'ai Buddhism and author of the most comprehensive guide to Chinese meditation, w the very effort of intense concentration may agitate the klesas (afflictions and illusions) gene feelings and desires that would not occur during normal consciousness, tempting the practiti practice.21 In any case, rarely does one question the teacher's level of attainment.

Could the problem have something to do with the description and view of enlightenment as s of seeing only what is, rather than a more dynamic view which also involves that which funct Buddhist attainment that also focuses on function, rather than objectifying an experience, wo primary emphasis on context and connections, i.e. relationships with other people and socie

The question of the relationship between enlightenment and cultivation has persisted in the the end of the eighth century onward. Enlightenment in this context refers to the experience into the true nature of reality. Cultivation may be taken as living one's day to day life from the point of view which includes an awareness of other people's full humanity and our connecte Ma-tsu (709-788), a major and influential Ch'an teacher, claimed that the sudden enlightenm inherently so thorough that the whole of the Buddha's path was realized and completed in th view came to be known as "sudden enlightenment/sudden cultivation." Other major Zen tea Tsung-mi24 (780-841), Yen-shou (901-975), and the Korean, Chinul (1158-1210) took the v enlightenment might bring full attainment, but perhaps only for exceptionally endowed indivi Sixth Patriarch Hui-neng and Ma-tsu. For the more ordinary run of mankind, who are less sp the enlightenment experience indeed offers a true view of one's self-nature, but without exha selfishness. Some delusions, such as existential bewilderment, may be overcome by a deep more deep-seated delusions such as craving, hatred and conceitedness can only be overco which we have seen a living experience and molding our life accordingly."25 The Buddhist i ethical life is comprised of not only exercising restraint and self-control, but also of positively manifesting compassion in our dealings with other people. Ch'an master Yen-shou put the n

If the manifesting formations are not yet severed and the defilements and habit energies per you see leads to passion and whatever you encounter produces impediments, then although the meaning of the non-arising state, your power is still insufficient. You should not grasp at understanding and say, "I have already awakened to the fact that the nature of the defileme later when you decide to cultivate, your practice will, on the contrary, become inverted. ... He be clear that if words and actions are contradictory, the correctness or incorrectness of one's be verified. Measure the strength of your faculties; you cannot afford to deceive yourself.26

As a matter of historical fact Ma-tsu's line survived and has dominated the Zen tradition from dynasty (960-1280) to this day while Tsung-mi's line, for instance, died out. The result is tha sudden enlightenment entailed sudden cultivation became the official rhetoric of Zen Buddhi but still orthodox, Zen view that sudden enlightenment had to be followed by gradual cultivat been de-emphasized. In Tsung-mi's words, "Awakening from delusion is sudden; transformi a saint is gradual."27 Most teachers are hardly fully enlightened Buddhas, but are people wh cultivate themselves further. We need to keep this in mind when we interact with them. Thou we must focus on our own shortcomings, there remains a place for common sense in viewin others, even those of our teachers. The Dalai Lama has written concerning the student's vie ". . . too much faith and imputed purity of perception can quite easily turn things rotten."28

A Critical Review of the International Zen Association

I. The foundation of the International Zen Association

The recent publication of Brian Victoria's book "Zen at War" has provided historical facts tha retrospect we know he did not tell the truth to his students. Although he knew about Sawaki'

II. Present structure of the AZI

Today, the internal structure of the AZI is hierarchical with the Committee and the "Masters" work together. After Deshimarus early death in 1982 (he died at the age of 68 from pancreas his disciples without appointing any heir. Like in his own case, the "Shiho" has been given to closest disciples by someone else acting as representative, namely by Niwa Zenji, the forme Eihei-ji. Interestingly, both Niwa Zenji and Yamada Reirin have, according to Brian Victoria's rather dark record of behaviour during war times and afterwards, too. Of course, this has be concealed to the western followers until today. From the three appointed successors one die

III. Methods of mind control

The following list of things I have experienced within the AZI is not exhaustive. I have just wr what came first into my mind and what I find most remarkable after reading some critical boo techniques of mind control used within cults (e.g. "Combatting Cult Mind Control" by Steven Guru Papers - Masks of authoritarian power" by Joel Kramer & Diana Alstad). I have therefo up what is "officially" said but also added my ideas about what really happens.

1. During initiations and information events, when explaining Zen to an interested audience, is laid on the beneficial aspects of Zen-Meditation on body and mind. Masters or leaders ofte practice is exactly what led the historical Buddha to enlightenment and that it can put an end

Anyone could practise it regardless of one's denomination. Some leaders can be brilliant at responding to questions posed from the relative, everyday-life perspective with answers ster absolute point of view of Buddhism and vice versa. Thus, they undermine the seemingly limi the questioners and often leave them deeply impressed and stupefied.

However, what is not mentioned is the fact that it is not about simple meditation at all, but th practice offered by the AZI is charged with and framed by an ideological system. That mean ceremonies are held twice every day before breakfast and lunch, Japanese sutras are being

2. Another deceiving explanation is what I would call equating a unique emotional experienc for a complex system of beliefs. To understand this, it is important to know, that the intense meditation ("Zazen") usually sets off very strong and unique emotions, especially when it is large group and under circumstances, which do not allow them to ventilate. Most of the pers

"highest state of mind" or as the "mind of Buddha". For lack of other, more rational explanati practitioners tend to buy this explanation and thus take on the complex ideology linked with experience. Moreover, this experience is regarded as "proof" for the correctness of the ideol foisted onto it ("proof through reframing"). Although a unique emotional experience is only a experience, not more and not less, upholding one's own system of beliefs under this conditio especially the younger ones who are seeking some certainty or group experience. Often peo would be confronted with higher expectations to take on more responsibilities and engage th intensively for the aim of spreading Zazen. These, in my view typical facts are totally concea diminished towards newcomers and most ordinary members.

3. The creation of a hidden dualism: The energy this practise usually sets off together with th

the practitioners are taught that all tasks would be of the same importance and that the diffe

4. One of the most powerful instruments to influence the participants is the teaching ("Kuser during the meditation itself. That means that people sit face to the wall and meditate, wherea admonished to concentrate on one's posture and not to follow one's own thoughts. Whether "teachings" or not, after a while, one will usually give up all possible resistance to it. During a lasting meditation period, concentrating on one's posture, it is simply impossible to uphold o conscience. So finally, one resigns and lets it wash over oneself. Deshimaru used to justify t saying that he would implant "seeds of wisdom" into the minds of his disciples and that his te played down and diminished. The leaders usually maintain that the Kusen simply serves to u concentration, to interrupt the flow of one's personal thoughts during Zazen or to help to bett and arrange one's thoughts.

This is however not true at all: The Kusen has the effect of a straightforward replacement of and one's system of values. It is a sort of a "guided meditation" and a method to introduce m others in a situation where others cannot decide whether to accept them or not nor pose any questions. It penetrates deeply into the unconsciousness where it continues to work and thu present everywhere. Pictures of him hang everywhere. Every morning after Zazen a process signs of a personality cult. Sometimes newcomers complain about this, too. It is astonishing and effectively Deshimaru managed to "implant" himself into his followers' minds.

In contrast to the alleged insignificance of the Kusen, when explaining its purpose to others themselves put great emphasis on their teachings. They want them to be written down corre translated meticulously, sold and, afterwards, disseminated. Usually two persons are design and record the Kusen being held during Zazen, one for the French language and one for an which the Kusen would be translated simultaneously. I have already seen three persons wri during the meditation. The scenery resembled more a press conference than a "meaningles or intentions. Also, the overseers of the Dojos are strongly encouraged to read the teachings hold them as a Kusen in their Dojos. It is one of their main tasks to encourage newcomers to the AZI and visit the sesshins. The results of proselytising are generally seen as a yardstick and righteousness of the practice and are rewarded with expressive approval, for example, the "Godo's table" during the meals.

5. The magical "key-word" used in nearly every second sentence is "ego". It is the personal spiritual path. This has as a consequence that any expression of one's free will that deviates of the master or leaders would be judged as egoistic and not in accordance with the Way. O masters' and leaders' wills are not egoistic because they claim to express the "Dharma" and dualistic and self-tainted conceptions. Nearly always, the very complex personal, social or fa

6. Whereas joining the AZI or one of its affiliated Dojos is a free decision, there is no legitima

"egoistic". During my 9-year membership within the AZI I have never heard any other comm leaving a Dojo other than that he or she was impelled by "severe personal problems" or by t workings of "ego". It is never respected as an expression of the leaving member's free will. N

What is not admitted or said is that it is highly unfair and not compassionate at all always to that one is being told off or reprimanded by up to ten or more different persons. The creating pressure nearly always happens with knowledge and tacit approval of the master. He does n as long as things happen in the desired way. If there is a problem he can appear as a "detac

"uninvolved" friend. Same tactics function well in the other direction too. An expressive prais would lead immediately to a higher reputation among the disciples. Interestingly, many of th and ambitious persons in everyday life get into the highest functions. Instead of being freed attachments, their same old behaviour patterns are reinforced and skilfully used for the aims organisation. Many of those in positions of authority put in this way into position finally becom and overloaded with the obligation to play a role that does not fit to them. They are unknowin instruments without having their real problems addressed.
Of course, this behaviour is interpreted as an advancement on the way because one does n any more. What really happens is, in my view, that one follows another the ego of another p regarded as being totally selfless, is still playing a role. The described mechanisms also star punishments all having to do with giving and withdrawing love and attention. Criticising the n ideology would lead to an immediate withdrawal of the other group members or even to over

This list, of course, could be continued further. The enumeration of critical issues is, howeve

IV. How I got involved and how I finally left

Before I encountered Zen I had already some experience of meditation, yoga and other met books I read about Zen it was highly praised as the purest, the fastest, the most direct and t uncompromising way to attain Satori, liberation and true "Buddhahood". So, I wanted to find the rigidity of the posture. I believed it as natural that the harder the practice was the better t must be. Although Zazen was very painful for the knees I felt a big relief afterwards. Zazen c experience, which I had never previously known. I decided to deepen my practice and visite often. Right from my first Zazen-experience the meditation period was loaded with the oral te given by the instructor sitting behind me. I became used to it and regarded it as normal. Sinc inculcated into us in an open manner, that all the teachings could - and ought to be - verified first-hand experience, I tended not to examine them too suspiciously. Furthermore, reading c Zen it seemed to be that Zen is absolutely exempt from any reproaches of being a cult. So, and more involved into the organisation, unwittingly taking on its ideology. By equating the u experience of Zen with a proof for a complex system of beliefs, I have accepted this ideology truth. And to repeat this experience, which I believed to be the "true Way", I have taken into above mentioned discrepancies and contradictions. I did see them for many years but, comp

The breaking-point came when I accidentally read the book "Zen at War" of B. Victoria and f did not want to become more rigid instead of more open. I did not want to sacrifice all of my private life, my friends, my work, my money, for the sake of Zazen. And I didn't want to beco myself either. That was not what I had been looking for. Realising the extent of the fake iden understood the "correct Zen", but I am nonetheless feeling much better now. For me that is made the right decision in going. I am enjoying my regained freedom but I also feel sorry for still involved in the AZI and perhaps moving in a direction that they have not chosen.

V. Some conclusions

The practice of Zen within the AZI is far more than a simple practice of sitting meditation. Th offered is loaded with and embedded into a complex ideological and authoritarian system of insidiously implanted into the participants while labelling it as "true Dharma". I do not want to either Zen or Buddhism in general. Although, I think that the problems I have tried to describ concern other Zen-groups in the West as well. In my view, meditation is a good thing to do a recommend it. The problems arise when an ideology or a belief system is added to it by usin control and without making it clear from the start. This is all the more important since the AZ belief-system is supposedly beyond rational criticism. Not being a buddhologist, I am unable critique from the religious point of view. I have, however, serious doubts that the uncritical be ultimate authority that is unassailable by rational arguments would really help oneself or othe is, in my view, a regression into childhood desires. It is regressive in that the master would t intensify and strengthen the bindings between him and his disciples, thus keeping up and ev state of dependency, whereas caring parents would educate their children to become totally independent from them.

It is not my intention to undermine the confidence which practitioners have in others and par their teachers. I believe that confidence in oneself and others is important for any personal g uncritical confidence in others, mixed with a lack of confidence in oneself is not a basis for tr
but is, in my view, doomed to failure. The AZI's internal structure of functioning and of intera described above, can be held as an example of a totalitarian society in miniature. This beco when one imagines to apply its ways of functioning to real society. What it offers is therefore new and not a model for a new social order that could solve the world's problems. I can ther recommend the AZI or its affiliated Dojos. For beginners interested in Zazen and keeping in have tried to outline, it is well worth a visit to learn about the posture and the method of sittin breathing, etc. But for those who are looking for a personal, self-responsible spiritual practic teaching of Buddha: "Don't believe what others say to you, prove it for yourself", the AZI is n place. I regret to say this because the practise of Zazen itself is not to blame. Neither do I wa that all the persons actively involved in this organisation would be malicious in that they knew really going on. I believe that even most of the directors unknowingly play their part in the sy simply continue to do to others what has been previously done to them. Unfortunately, those inside the system have only little chances to see through it.

I do not want this report to be regarded as an "objective truth" either. It is simply a short sum own personal and therefore subjective experiences and should be understood as such. Ther things I would like to point out: Firstly, I am not the only one to have left with such sentiment talked to other ex-members, and their experiences are similar to mine. Secondly, the crucial to finally break away was a free access and a free flow of third-party information. I believe th mind-control techniques within the AZI stand and fall with the possibility of controlling inform finally one of the reasons why I have decided to write this report. I would like to encourage o especially those who are involved in the AZI or similar organisations, to assess their situatio

When Burma became independent in 1948 the new government sponsored a revival of Buddhism. This included creating a centre in Rangoon to teach meditation practice, especially to laypeople. Teaching meditation to laypeople was an innovation, as in traditional Buddhist societies meditation is generally practised only by monks and nuns. Mahasi Sayadaw was invited to be in charge of the new centre.
The Mahasi Sasana Yeiktha (or Mahasi Centre, as it is generally referred to in English) now teaches thousands of students every year and has over 300 branch centres inside and outside Burma. It remains one of the most important centres of Theravada Buddhism in the world today, and the source of one of the most influential meditation lineages in Theravada Buddhism.

The Buddha talked about meditation in terms of two aspects: calm and wisdom. Depending on how we goes about our meditation practice, we can practice with a focus on developing either calm or wisdom. Satipatthana vipassana is a wisdom practice, and is essentially about understanding the real nature of ourselves and our world.

Satipatthana is a compound word derived from sati and upatthana. Sati means "awareness"; upatthana means "foundation"; so satipatthana means "the foundation of awareness". Vipassana comes from the root pas, meaning "to see"; passana means "seeing", and the prefix vi denotes separation. Vipassana means seeing separately, seeing distinctly, and therefore seeing with penetration. Satipatthana vipassana is the penetrating vision which is founded on awareness. Usually this kind of meditation is called vipassana meditation, or insight meditation, but strictly speaking, vipassana or insight is not something that we do. Insight is what happens as a result of what we do. What we do is develop awareness; the development of awareness is the entirety of the practice.

Buddhism is a wisdom tradition. The word buddha comes from the root budh, meaning "wake", or "know". A buddha is an awakened one, one who knows. The English word "enlightenment" is a bit misleading. This word was used by early translators of Buddhist scriptures, but it comes from a European tradition which upholds the supremacy of reason. Enlightenment in the European sense refers to the light of reason. Enlightenment in the Buddhist sense has got nothing to do with the thinking mind. The Pali equivalent is bodhi, "awakenment". We are concerned here with awakenment; this is the essential goal of meditation practice.

The Buddha began his teaching with the simple statement that we have a problem; everyone has a problem. If we who are gathered here tonight did not have a problem, none of us would have come. This universal problem, or rather the fact that everyone has a problem, the Buddha called dukkha. Dukkha is usually translated as "suffering", but can more accurately be translated as "unsatisfactoriness". Dukkha is a technical term which refers to the fact that every aspect of our experience is not quite perfect; every aspect of our experience is unsatisfactory. Dukkha ranges from the most gross physical pain on one extreme through to the slightest imperfection on the other. An experience of exquisite pleasure is, from the Buddhist point of view, dukkha, unsatisfactory, because even as we enjoy this pleasure, at the back of our minds a shadow lurks - the knowledge that this too will end.

If an experience was perfect it would not end - it would just go on forever. Hence, people have the ideal of heaven as the goal of the religious life - the place in which there is happiness, permanently. In other words, a place where there is no dukkha. We haven't actually met anybody who has been to heaven, because in terms of human experience permanent happiness never occurs. There is no situation, no aspect of our experience, which is perfect.

The body is unsatisfactory; the body is uncomfortable. This can be tested. Try going home and adopting the most comfortable position that you can, so you are at your most relaxed and most comfortable. Then see how long you can remain still before you must move. As soon as you move, check yourself and ask: "Why do I want to move?" The answer will be it's because I'm not comfortable, I want to get comfortable. That's why we move. And if we want to get comfortable, that means we are un-comfortable.

The same applies for the mind. If the mind was comfortable, we could rest the mind on any experience and just leave it there; but we can't. The mind is incredibly restless, moving from one thing to another, to another, to another, to another. It does this for the same reason that the body moves - because it's always looking for satisfaction and never quite getting it.

We have a problem, and the way to resolve the problem is to understand the problem. Satipatthana, the development of awareness, is all about learning how to look. If we look, then it's possible we may see; if we see, in that seeing there is understanding. To see is to understand. Further, when there is understanding, the problem dissolves. Understanding is the cessation of suffering.

This is a pretty radical statement. Why the Buddha saw things this way is something we will talk about as the weeks go by. But the basic principle guiding our practice is this: to see is to understand; and to understand is to solve the problem.

The kind of understanding we are talking about is not intellectual. It has nothing to do with philosophy. The looking and seeing in meditation practice is extraordinarily simple, and the reason why it is so difficult is precisely because it is so simple. We are constantly trying to make things complicated. As soon as we start to think about things we complicate them. Meditation practice is the simplicity of direct experience, rather than the complexity of thinking about experience. What we do is look at our experience, the experience of the body and of the mind; the mind-body process.

The Buddha called his way to awakenment the noble eightfold way, the way which has eight aspects. Of these eight aspects, three deal directly with meditation, and we will be working with these three aspects each night we are here. They are: vayama; sati; and samadhi. Vayama is usually translated as "effort", but is really "energy/effort"; sati is "awareness"; and samadhi, usually translated as "concentration", is "calm". We are developing these three aspects - energy, awareness, calm - and the central one is awareness.
Awareness is that which knows what is happening as it is happening; that which knows what is happening, now. The first thing to notice about awareness is that awareness always refers to what is happening right now. I cannot be aware of what will happen;

it's impossible. I cannot be aware of what did happen; that also is impossible. I can only be aware of what is happening, right now. The field of our investigation is right now.

Awareness requires energy. If there is no energy there can't be any awareness. When we are asleep we are not aware, except in dream images. This is because the energy levels of the body and mind are very low. When we full of energy the mind is clear. The energy which is required in the meditation practice is purely and simply the energy necessary to turn the attention to some specific experience.

Awareness is always awareness of some specific experience. There is no such thing as awareness in a vacuum; awareness always has an object. "I'm aware" means that "I'm aware of some thing". Awareness is specific. The energy involved in the meditation practice is the effort necessary to deliberately turn and aim the mind to "What is it that I'm aware of right now?"; "What is this, right now?"

Imagine I'm walking down the street with a friend and my friend says, "Look at that!", giving no indication of what he is referring to. There is a lot going on in my field of vision, so how can I know what he is talking about? If he points and says, "Look at that over there!", then I can turn my attention and look at that specific thing there. This is the energy involved in meditation practice: the energy necessary to turn the attention and look at that thing there. In walking down the street physical energy is involved as I turn my head; in meditation the energy is not physical, but purely mental. Just turning the attention to that something.

So energy and awareness always go together. The energy, the effort involved, is to turn the attention to what is happening, right now; what is happening, now; what is it, now?; what is it, now? If awareness is continuous over a period of time, then spontaneously and quite naturally the mind will calm down. We then have our third factor, calm.

Samadhi, or calm, is usually translated as "concentration" Samadhi comes from the root dha, "to put" or "to place"; the prefix a, which means "toward"; and the prefix sam, which here means "together" or "with". It means "to put together" or "to bring together". Samadhi is defined in the Buddhist scriptures as the "unification of the mind". Bringing everything together into one.

Samadhi is the capacity of the mind to rest upon a single experience. Note the use of the word "rest". When I started practising meditation I was confused by the use of the word "concentration", because for me concentration was something which I had to do in school, when sitting hunched over a desk with a worried frown on my face. But that is not concentration, it is strain. Samadhi is calm. It is the capacity of the mind to rest and be still.

Normally the mind is rushing from one thing to another. We can compare the movement of mind with the movement of steam. The steam molecules are rushing all over the place. When the steam cools and becomes water, the molecules are sliding around but they are not moving so violently. The temperature drops further and ice forms. The molecules are still moving but their movement is very restricted. The more the temperature drops, the more restricted the movement of the molecules, until we reach absolute zero temperature. Here the molecules are completely still. Just as there is absolute zero temperature, so there is absolute samadhi, where the mind is completely motionless.

Tranquillity practice, where the aim of the practice is simply to make the mind motionless, is samatha. There are various benefits which arise from calm. The most obvious is bliss. The more still the mind is, the more blissful the experience. You could say that the mind is naturally blissful, and this bliss manifests, quite spontaneously, to the degree that the mind calms down. That is one of the major attractions of this kind of practice. If we go through a period each day when we still the mind and experience a bliss which is not dependent upon external circumstances, then obviously this is going to be very beneficial, very therapeutic.
There are these three aspects of mind: energy/effort; awareness; calm. We must have balance between these three aspects. If there is not enough energy and too much calm, then the mind is very peaceful, still, and having a good time; but heavy, dull, not knowing. We may even fall asleep. If there's too much energy and not enough calm, then the mind becomes very tense, very restless, and although it's working very hard, trying to concentrate, it can't actually penetrate the experience. It can't get below the surface of things. The mind just becomes very agitated; controlled, but agitated.

Energy on the one hand and calm on the other must be balanced; the balancing factor is awareness. You can have too much energy; you can have too much calm; you can not have too much awareness. Awareness brings energy and calm into balance. When they are in balance then you find that the whole practice opens. Awareness functions as a balancing factor for all mental factors, for all aspects of the mind, not just these two. If we have a balanced mind, we have a balanced life. What brings balance to the mind is awareness.

When there is a great deal of awareness in the mind upekkha manifests. Upekkha means "equanimity". In early translations upekkha was grossly mistranslated as "indifference". Enlightened people are supposedly indifferent to what's going on. Equanimity, however, is not indifference. Indifference is a dull state of mind and presupposes a lack of awareness. Where there is strong awareness, there is balance. A mind which is balanced is completely alive, intimate with every experience and interested in what's going on. Indeed, one thing we discover in the practice is that when there is strong awareness everything becomes interesting.
If you walk into a meditation hall and look at what people are doing, you see them sitting still or doing slow walks up and down, 30 minutes or 60 minutes at a time. You wouldn't have to stand there very long before thinking: "This is incredibly boring! How can they do this?" But as one actually practises, as awareness develops, it becomes endlessly fascinating. Doing the walking meditation we discover that every step is uniquely different. When we are indifferent, or bored, everything is the same. Every day is the same. But when there's awareness, every moment is totally unique, and because it's totally unique, it's endlessly fascinating. The extraordinary thing is that every moment is totally unique; this moment is unique. This is the way things are. But we don't see it. Where there is strong awareness, we actually begin to see it. We begin to see things as they are.

We are developing energy, awareness and calm, and to do this we give the mind something to be aware of, calling it the primary object. We make this primary object the breathing as sensed in the abdomen. As I breathe in the abdomen moves, it swells, or as they say in Burma, the abdomen "rises". As I breathe out, again there is movement in the abdomen, the abdomen "falls". There is a "rising" and a "falling". The rising and the falling of the abdomen are the primary object. Here, "rising" and "falling" are code for the actual physical sensations experienced in the body when I breathe in and when I breathe out.

We focus attention on the abdomen because for most people most of the time the sensations involved with breathing are the most gross and obvious in this area. However, as you look for these sensations that occur in the body as the result of breathing - movement, pressure, tension, and so on - focus on wherever they are most predominant in this moment. They may be in the abdomen, they may be in the chest, they may be moving around. It doesn't matter where the sensations occur, what is important is that you examine them where they are most obvious and distinct. If you are in any doubt, focus on the abdomen. Don't spend time thinking about "What am I supposed to be looking at?" That's one of the reasons why we have this primary object, it eliminates the need for internal discussion.

We are looking at the breathing process and discover that, directly experienced, the in-breath is a series of sensations - movement, pressure, tension and so on - within the body. The out-breath is a series of changing physical sensations. It is these actual sensations that we are looking at. And just as when walking down the street my friend indicates something by pointing to it, in the same way we use a pointing technique; we use labels. As we look at some experience we stick a label on it. While breathing in we use the label "rising; rising", mentally repeating the words. While breathing out we use the label "falling; falling". If a different label spontaneously arises, one which describes the sensation more appropriately, then feel free to use it, but if you have no particular objection to them, just use "rising" and "falling".

These are simply labels; they are not what we are looking at. When someone points to something to indicate it to us, we look at the thing indicated, not the finger that points. The attention is not on the label, the attention is on the actual sensation, the actual experience, of breathing in and breathing out.

So, I'm looking at my breathing. Inevitably, at some point I realise that my mind has gone off somewhere; I realise I am "distracted". As soon as I realise that, I am faced with a choice. I could, for example, begin to think: "I'm not doing it! I'm supposed to be looking at my breath. I was doing it a moment ago, but now I've lost it."

When we do this we abandon the practice. The secret of this practice is the continuity of awareness. If I react to my loss of attention and then return to the breath I have deliberately and knowingly created a gap in the awareness. But what I want to do is to narrow the gaps as much as possible, to ensure that awareness is continuous. To do this I make the distraction itself the practice, and call it the secondary object.

This brings us to our alternative. I'm sitting here observing the breath. I start off watching the inhalation, the exhalation, and as I'm doing this I'm making the label "rising; falling". Pretty soon

I fall into a dream state, until I suddenly awaken with the realisation, "I'm dreaming". At this moment
I look at the experience - "dreaming; dreaming" - and I stick the label on it. I identify it. Right now, this is what I'm doing: "dreaming; dreaming";
"thinking; thinking". Awareness is that which knows what is happening now. If what is happening now is a distraction, then my awareness can only be awareness of this distraction itself. If I fail to grasp this,
and seek to drop my "distraction" in order to return to my "meditation", then in fact I deliberately postpone the meditation in order to pick it up again some time in the future. But awareness postponed is awareness denied.

The complete instruction for the practice is: "Be aware!". How can I be aware all the time? I can't.
But what I can do is be aware now. I can be aware of anything, including the fact that I am no longer aware. To be clearly aware of my distraction is awareness; it is the practice itself.

Note that what I am not doing as I investigate my distractions is looking at the content of the mind;
what I am doing is looking at the process of the mind. If I realise that I'm daydreaming about something, I am not interested in what the daydream is about. That is completely and utterly irrelevant.
What I am interested in is simply the fact of daydreaming.

The mind is like a television on the information
superhighway, with ten thousand channels available twentyfour hours a day, seven days a week. I have a remote control device, and can instantly switch from any one of these ten thousand channels to any other.

Every channel plays a single soap opera, and the star of every soap opera is me! All of these soap operas are endlessly fascinating, and none of them come to an end.

I do not want to get caught up in the soap opera. It's the difference between someone sitting in a room watching television and being absorbed in the drama, and someone who comes into the room, sees that person is watching the television, simply observes, "George is watching the soap opera", and leaves. Both of these people are seeing exactly the same thing, they are both seeing the same television and the same soap opera. But there is a difference in attitude between the two. One is absorbed in the drama; the other is simply observing - "Television is on; soap opera". That's all. And that's the kind of looking we are developing in this practice.

When there is thinking, just make the label "thinking; thinking", and try to watch simply the fact of thinking. "Dreaming; dreaming". An emotion will come, a feeling will arise. Identify it. "Boredom; boredom". "Worry"; "sorrow"; "pleasure"; "anticipation"; whatever it is. Watch it. Know what it is. Feel it, taste it, investigate it.
Investigate it not by thinking about it, wondering "What's going on here? Why am I feeling this? I was feeling differently a moment ago. What happened to me ten years ago that I should be feeling like this now?" The investigation of the feeling is simply observing the feeling, now, with penetrating attention.
I realise I'm feeling irritated. What does it feel like? What does irritation actually feel like? What does it feel like in the mind? What does it feel like in the body? The Buddha said "Anger burns". Does it? Is there any heat, any change in the body, when I'm feeling angry? Where is it? Is there any tightness? Do I get tight in the belly? In the neck? In the head?

I sit watching the sensations in the abdomen, when suddenly I realise I'm thinking of something. I watch "thinking; thinking", and go back to the primary object. But then I realise I'm thinking about the same thing again, and it becomes clear there is something else going on here - "anxiety; anxiety". The thoughts are motivated. Underneath those thoughts there is a feeling, "anxiety; anxiety", and I watch anxiety. What does it feel like? I might discover that the stomach is tense - "tension; tension". Then I feel hardness in the back - "hard; hard". It is a continuous and everchanging investigation. Whatever is happening now, that's what I'm looking at.

Please remember: it doesn't matter what the object of awareness is; what matters is the quality of the awareness. We can be looking at anything, and the meditation will work. When we are not looking, the meditation is not working. Beginners must be careful, however. It's easier to look at physical experiences. Physical experiences are fairly gross and obvious. They stick around for a while. The mind is incredibly slippery, incredibly fast. It's very difficult to catch. Also we are much more likely to identify with the mind. If a thought arises we see it as my thought; if a feeling arises we see it as my feeling; and we get caught up with them. We also identify with physical sensations, but they not quite as gripping. In the beginning it's better to stay in the body as much as possible.

We sit here and we start to hurt. I'm sure some of you are feeling a bit achey already, sitting in this unusual posture. What does it feel like in the buttocks? If I put my attention to the buttocks I feel: hardness; sharpness; the touch of the foot against the thigh - warmth; pressure. There are all sorts of sensations going on, and they become uncomfortable. Pretty soon I can observe "pain; pain".

Pain is very interesting, partly because it compels our attention, and partly because if we actually look at it, it breaks up. There is the physical sensation and the mental response to the physical sensation, the response of "I don't like this". Both of these can be investigated. But when we look at some aspect of experience, we must be clear about what aspect we are looking at. When I look at physical sensation, just sensation; when I look at the mental response, just "dislike; dislike"; "aversion; aversion". Awareness is precise; it is awareness of this specific experience and not any other.

In brief, we are looking at the body and mind as they manifest from moment to moment; the body and mind as they manifest, now. Our central reference point is the breath. We keep coming back to the breath when we are in any doubt about what's happening, if we don't know if we're doing it right, or if we have any questions or whatever. Whenever the mind goes somewhere else, as soon as I know that the mind has gone I identify that experience: "thinking"; "seeing"; "touching"; "feeling"; "hard"; "soft"; whatever it is. And in both cases, whether it's the breath, or whether it's anything else, I'm really looking at it closely. I want to know what it is. What exactly is this? Don't take anything for granted. The way of awareness presupposes an absolute refusal to take anything for granted.

The attitude of the meditator is rather like the attitude of a certain rabbi who lived in a town in eastern Europe. Every morning before dawn he would get up and cross town to the synagogue. His route always took him across the town square. Every day, just as the sun was beginning to rise, the rabbi would appear in one street on the side of the square, walk right across and disappear down the opposite street. In the town square was a policeman, who was on that particular beat. And every day, at dawn, the policeman would see this particular rabbi appear out of one street, cross the square and disappear down the other street.

One night the policeman went out on the town drinking, got home late and was severely scolded by his wife. Then he had to get up very early in the morning and stagger off to work. So that particular dawn he was standing in the square and feeling in a very bad mood. When the rabbi appeared at his usual place something snapped in the policeman.

He called out, "Hey you!"

"Me?", replied the rabbi.

"Get over here!", the policeman said.

The rabbi came up to him. The policeman demanded, "Where do you think you're going?"

"I don't know."

The policeman was furious. "Don't give me cheek! Where are you going?"
"I don't know."

This infuriated the policeman even further, and he grabbed the rabbi and shook him and said, "For the last time, where are you going?"

The rabbi just looked him in the eyes and said, "I don't know."

This was enough for the policeman. He dragged the rabbi off to the police station, thinking of the innumerable charges he would throw at him. He was in the very act of hurling him into a cell when the rabbi looked up and said, "You see! You never do know, do you?"

This is the way it is. In actual fact we never do know. We take things for granted and switch into habit mode. We sleepwalk through our lives. As John Lennon says, "Life is what happens while we're busy making other plans." That is how we live most of the time. We take things for granted, we drop into habit. Taking things for granted, this habitual half-awake half-asleep state, is the norm. Here we are practising paying very close attention to what it is, right now. So don't take anything for granted. Look. Investigate. What is this inbreath? What does it actually feel like? Where is it? How long does it last? Look at it. Look at it. What about this outbreath? What is this? What's happening? Suddenly I'm distracted. What is it? What is this distraction? Come back to the breath. What is this breath? And do it now; do it now; do it now.

Suddenly I realise I'm not doing it. "Thinking; thinking". Come back now; come back now. Don't postpone! Just do it now. The doing itself is incredibly simple. Just turn the attention to what is happening, right now. It could not be simpler. Just look - now!

If we are looking, now; if we are simply observing what is happening, right now, then regardless of what is happening, regardless of what actually is, that's it. That's all we have to do. The path unfolds. If we are not doing it now, we're gone. Nothing is happening. There is a Zen expression: if you miss by a hair's breath, you are off by ten thousand miles. Ten thousand is the traditional Chinese number for infinity. If we miss by a hair's breath, we are off by an infinite distance. On the other hand, if we are here, we're right here! So simple. So difficult.

Ã*$Ã• ”DHAMMA NOTESœ•ƒ

”Our Situation•

We live in this world and we think that we know a lot about it. We have material bodies and we know that they are made of the same sort of things as rock and mud, wood and water. There is also a strong tendency to think that these materials are ultimate, real, that apart from them there is nothing.

This is the basic materialistic view. It is a strange view, exactly how strange I hope to show further on. But to start with it is well to see where it came from.

If we leave aside all ideas of previous lives for the time being, we may suppose that at birth we started off clear of all views and were only replete with a lot of "instincts"(But I will not go into the vexed question of where they came from).

Amongst these instincts, the instinct of survival is one of the strongest, and the young baby does everything it can to survive. It grabs at food, it grabs at its parents for safety and it is full of fears of unknown dangers. As it grows up it learns more and more about its immediate environment, steadily expanding out into the world.

It is important to see in this, how the earliest experiences in life involved materials of this world, so it is not too surprising that materials should be looked on as "real". Yet when we consider what has happened, we should be able to see that this view of materialism has been "programmed" into us by the circumstances of our upbringing.

I think that the majority of people are very firmly grounded in this "materialistic programme" and they view everything from this ground. For example, if the Buddhist idea of rebirth is considered, people tend to ask, what was I in the past? What will I be in the future? But these are questions which are asked from the basic understanding of the world view that most people have. Questions such as, "what is the true meaning of 'past' and 'future'?", are not even thought of, nor such questions as, "what is it in fact that came from the last life, lives in this life and will go to the next one ?"

These firmly grounded ideas that people have, are what the Buddha called 'Samutti'© supposition. In other words, we suppose that the world is like this that we think it is; we suppose that what we sense in the world is really there in some ultimate way. We suppose, but we do not • knowœ. We suppose because we find that everyone else is supposing the same thing, which gives us confidence in our own supposing, even though the whole lot may be false © and in fact there is a fair amount of evidence for the faslsity of a lot of what we suppose.

• ”Analysis of our Situation

œ•It is quite possible for us to analyse our situation in life by using plain reason, up to quite a high level. But only provided that we are ready to accept, or at least seriously consider whatever our reasoning leads us to. If we have fixed and rigid views, opinions, beliefs or faiths, then it may beÜjÜ quite impossible for us to question and see through this 'world of supposition'.

The most effective way to analyse our situation is to start externally with the world, which we think we know. But in fact, how do we know the world ? The only way that is normally available to us is by the use of our senses © sight, hearing, smell, taste, and touch. This suggests where our investigation should start.

All the five senses work in much the same way in that they are stimulated by appropriate external objects which react on special receptors. They in turn set up a train of electroªchemical pulses that travel down the nerves, generally terminating in the brain. This is, in brief, the regular scientific view, and it is convenient for us to accept it as a suitable starting point.

Let us take a specific sense, the sense of sight, as typical of all of them. Say an object is seen, such as a tree. Light reflects off all the relevant parts of the tree and a small part of this light enters ones eyes. Due to the geometry of optics, this light displays a small image of the tree, upside down, on the retina. Much as a camera acts in taking a photo. The image selectively excites the retinal cells, which transmit nerve impulses down the optic nerve to the brain. What happens in the brain then, is either poorly understood, or not yet understood at all. But the significant thing is that from all this one experiences the seeing of a tree. But where does the experience of seeing a tree take place ? Is the tree that we see, in fact out there in the world? Or is that image on the retina what we see? Or is there some coded image in the brain that we see? In fact, as the whole of our experience of sight is of the same sort as our seeing of the tree, our ideas of visual space and location cannot be defined except in terms of visual objects. Therefore, the best that we can say is that, the tree is seen in the realm of seeing; and it has little meaning to ask where the realm of seeing is located.
